M. Thiers' First Message—Plain Definition of the Government—The Assembly—An American Chorister—An Old Scandal—A Word for M. Thiers—A French Statement of the New-York Frauds.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Sept. 15, 1871.

The important topic of the day is the first message of President THIERS, and the various journalistic comments upon it. It offers a curious subject of contemplation and study. Nowhere very enthusiastic in its praise, but even I believe, received as a worthy document, it has done it in ways which indicate will disappointed those who say that the wits and the fine line are given to the message, while what the writers regard all into's line of inordinate praise is foreign to the matter in hand as the man in the moon. Yet this is a favorite style with Parisian journalists, and little knowledge of their readers really imagine that they are reading an unqualified approval of the subject of the theme. The other journals condemn the message in more or less forcible terms. One must confess that the document does not amount to much, but under the peculiar circumstances I do not think any one would have done better. Imagine the feelings of a cordon bleu who was engaged to make a soup for five and twenty only, each one of whom he knows to be ready for advance criticism, and one can have an idea of what it is to write a message which must please twenty different parties. Doubtless the master-hand would do as M. THIERS seems to have done, that is, say as little as possible, but appear to say a great deal. "That which we cut out of our pocket," says GRIMM, "is never missed," and critics are what one does not say are always less severe than are what one says badly, or says against the opinions of a score of forrest-eyed critics.

SUMMARY OF OPINIONS.

In the instance, however, a majority of the attacks are for what the President does not say. Some take him to task for using too many words. The Gaulois says that the whole message could have been condensed thus:

"Gentlemen, we have all of us need of repose; the hour for the election of the General Council is approaching. It is well that you should find yourselves in your departments. Let us separate. My intention was to beg you to vote, before your departure, a few duties (impôts) that we think necessary. But, after reflection, we have thought that it would be possible to postpone the discussion until your return. The taxes you will not vote you will vote later. We answer for everything in your absence."

If toned down, this journal thinks, the message would amount to that, and no more, although it might be said in several fashions. The Constitutionnel, also Paris, thinks that M. THIERS in deserting the Republic and going back to his first love—the Constitutional Monarchy. This is seen in the way the President caresses the Right, and in the "repentance and reiteration of his personal opinions in speaking of the Monarchy which has given to our country a thousand years of glory and of grandeur, while he has only found for the Republic the very coldest terms." Two other Republican journals rescue the cool manner in which the President treats the Republic. According to the Paris Journal, "the weakness of the message is only equaled by its length." The Français thinks that the Assembly is treated like a bundle of "old clo's," and that M. THIERS makes very little account of the sovereignty of the Parliament. The same journal thinks that the reader of the message, M. JULES SIMON, was also the writer of it, which would account for the many faults of taste.

The Republican journals hold nearly the same opinions, and the Siècle says that the message is "a mixture of the Monarchy and the Republic, which is precisely nothing. It is made up of pious phrases borrowed and turned. Not a worthy word; not a single elevated thought. It is made expressly in order to labor, and it announces that one labors in order to repose. There were paragraphs so astounding that it was thought they had been put in there by some half-witted reporter, but which were approved by the Ministry, so vulgar that the sound of laughter covered them."

QUERULOUSNESS.

The Press, the journal of M. DE LA GUERONNIÈRE, says that M. THIERS is impartial, preserves the equilibrium between the parties and leans neither to the Right nor to the Left, which criticism means about as much as the message. The Journal de Paris analyzes without remark. The Gazette de France blames M. THIERS for closing Pandora's box for his reader, and among the reasons given is that

"The sleeping voice and the calamitous fate of M. SIMON, as well as his attitude on entering the tribune, make everybody think that he was going to pronounce a discourse on the question of rewards or of merit, and that he would address the chamber as young people. There was a burst of hilarity when he said that there were some questions which divided parties without dividing hearts, and it is impossible to describe the inimitable manner of delivering these words. The orator bent his head upon the left shoulder, suddenly turned his eyes upon his auditors, and stroked out both arms as if to say: Dear parents, how I should like to press you all to my bosom! And yet, in spite of this, we ought to suspend the seal like the sailors, if the moment arrives that bit of fantastic psychologic doctrine. But when he arrived at the usual metaphor of the vessel in peril, and of the action of the crew upon the ship in danger, a catching fit of laughter ran through the hall."

La Paix thinks that decidedly, M. THIERS has again entered the groueries of the monarchical cause.

"Either we deceive ourselves," it remarks, "or M. THIERS has come back to the convictions of his past life, feeling again more attachment for the Monarchy than for the Republic. On the one side the speech is cut in the serious traditions of a thousand years, and on the other it represents France abandoning itself to the torrent which precipitates nations toward an unknown future."

L'Avenir National thinks "the message, a sort of moral discourse, dressed in a weak and sentimental garb," which marks another hand than that of M. THIERS. On the other hand the Figaro asserts that M. THIERS is the author. The Bien Public thinks the message "an act of good and honest politiques" and does not go into praise of the ideal Republic.

The other critiques are as bizarre as the specimens I have here given, and I will close the list with LOUIS VEUILLOT, (Univers,) and PRAMPUS SARCEY. The length of the former forces me to condense. In all Europe, says he, and in the world entire, only in Sérénissime M. THIERS and the rosy-fingered Aurora could talk politique in that manner. Holding out his rosy-tipped fingers, M. THIERS says that we have only to let him do whatever he pleases, and in a little while roasted larks will begin to fall in France. The nation is to be installed at table and the roasted larks, smoking hot, are to fall of their own accord, and everybody is to have more butter than bread. Beyond this the message means nothing says SARCEY.

"The Assembly listened to this singular message, some with chagrin, some with malicious joy, all with astonishment. It was not the discourse of the Chief of an Empire; it was the babbling of an old man who had forgotten, on that day, to have esprit. If, failing in this, he had only read those high sentiments which come from the exercise of sovereign power; if, after yet, failing in all that, he had only shown good taste! If he had only remembered the precepts of his old rhetoric, which recommends to kings and rulers that which TACITUS called the imperatoria brevitas!"

Well, I do not know how others may regard it, but for my part I can say that these are the most remarkable criticisms it has ever been my fortune to stumble upon. It is with regret that I throw aside some more for want of space. Naturally one will ask whether or not the author of the "Comédie," and the Empire" really did write the message. My own opinion is that he did not. That metaphor of the ship in a storm, that vessel, that crew, those passengers, and several other bits of sentimentality, make one fancy, like King Bobèche when Boule-Rose entertains his seventh wife, that one has heard all that before. That image is repeated too many times in the Comédie of M. JULES SIMON to leave any doubt as to its origin, and I believe that M. THIERS, full of work and of cares, delegated the task to his schoolmaster MIGNERON, who made a mess of it. It is also probable that M. THIERS corrected and pruned until afraid of wounding the amour propre of M. SIMON, and that this accounts for many curious phrases which are left. One remark of the Avenir Libérale will be noticed. It says that some of the phrases had to be suppressed. This is true, and the enemies of the Government, who were prepared to make the most of a few phrases retained by their supporters, have traced the corrections to the Officiel. What hand made them is not known, but M. WITTERSHEIM, the Director, is called to account. It is said, however, that the session had no sooner ended than a delegation from each party ran to the prefectoral-presidential palace, and that after each conference M. THIERS sent a messenger to make a new correction in the manuscript. Taken as a whole—what a pictural

THE ASSEMBLY.

I have but a few words to say about the Assembly. M. THIERS has been very anxious to get it out of his way, and showed that anxiety diplomatic that the Right became alarmed. The Government announced that it was in favor of the longest vacation mentioned. A member rose to say that he hoped nothing would be done about the German treaties in the absence of the Deputies, so as to put the Chamber, on its return, in presence of an accomplished fact. M. POUYER-QUERTIER replied that nothing would be done—at least, if the treaty was made to go away with the cotes for Alsace and Lorraine, the Assembly need not oppose it. This was not satisfactory to all, for the faces of the Right seemed to show that they were reflecting upon the adage that possession is several points in the law. But after all M. THIERS will not have a very long tether, and there need be no fears that he will put the country to pawn, declare war or make a coup d'état during the vacation, for a careful eye, or fifty eyes, is to be upon him. Rummaging in an old chest of musty constitutions, some one found that for this and dropped an eye upon "article 8," which provides for the present emergency. Therefore, under its provisions a Parliamentary commission of twenty-five members, chosen by secret ballot and from the different parties, is to remain to watch the acts of the President. To the proposition for electing this committee, M. LANGLOIS proposed an amendment giving it the power "to raise the state of siege," which amendment, for all it had to do with the matter in hand, might have given the Committee the power "to raise three thousand men, and to rival Dr. WITHERSPOON as a raiser." Everybody laughed, there were three votes against the amendment and none for it, and M. LANGLOIS tore his hair for a moment, then went to his bench to watch for another proposition, upon which he could tack his hobby.

AN AMERICAN CHARITY.

It will be gratifying to your Philadelphia readers to learn that their offering to the French sufferers has been a real charity and a real success. Messrs. DREXEL, HARJES & Co., the agents of the Philadelphia Committee, have made a very judicious distribution of the funds, although it was considerably delayed by the Government. The cargo of the Relief was sold at Rouen though not high, quite satisfactory, considering the condition of the market, it producing $1,500 in francs. Of this amount, the sum contributed by the Ladies' French Bazar [illegible] for those generous and timely efforts. The ladies of Philadelphia can be assured that their exertions have not been made in vain.

AN OLD SCANDAL.

Perhaps some of my readers will remember the bloody drama of the rue Tournon, and the suicide of the Commandant TREVEY in the chamber of a lady bearing a name illustrious on both sides. I do not recall the date, but I was away at the antipodes at the time, and remember the event the story created. Before his death the Commandant left a sort of rough testament in which he made over, as his property, two pawntickets for jewels engaged by Mme. la Marquise DE LA MORLE-FERRILON. There have been so many bloody dramas since that time that the one had almost passed away from memory when it was brought up by an application on the part of the Marquise, indorsed and supported by her husband, for the recovery of these tickets which the officer had willed to another. The tribunal of the Seine ordered their restitution. The moral of this is the same as in the case of M. PATER—that these are suits which ought never to be brought even when certain of gaining them. But this lets a new light upon the affair. While it does not excuse the Marquise it shows us the character of the Commandant, and we can no longer regret that he blew his brains out. It was bad enough to take the poor woman's jewels and pawn them for money; it was worse to will away the tickets as his own property. As strange as it may seem the position occupied by Commandant TREVEY is one at which a very large number of the young men of this country aim, and it is the heights of their ambition to be a pensioner upon some Marquise.

A WORD FOR M. THIERS.

I have always claimed since the close that M. THIERS was the only man for the Executive, and I have recognized his genius and his patriotism. It would be too much to say that he is the only man in France capable of ruling, for there are many capable men in the ranks of the Imperial party, but he is the only man who would stand any sort of chance in the present tempest of the nation and of the Chamber. Therefore he ought to be sustained, guided gently, corrected now and then, and held firmly to the port of Bordeaux. By this course the Republicans would be the ultimate gainers and France, without knowing it, would be gradually founding a good Republic. But the Republicans are in too great a hurry. GAMBETTA is growing impatient; LOUIS BLANC has no more of the honors that he had under the Empire, and LANNIER, at 45 pence one want a chance at the public pap. Consequently they are all joining the enemy in ridiculing the only man who can save them. Any one who has lived in France knows that a change is near when a public man becomes the subject of general ridicule. The French can stand any thing but that. Lately M. THIERS has been the but of all. Some call him La Sérénissime—some La Sentilité, and others quote Son Address in a sneering way. M. THIERS thinks that he knows his crowd. He ordered the suppression of a comic journal representing him as a lacquay, forbade several other caricatures, and has tried to turn the attacks again upon NAPOLEON. When the latter was Prince-President he had it reported that he had laughed most heartily over some caricatures of himself, sent a recompense to the artist, and told the caricaturists that they were free to caricature him as much as they pleased. The result was an immediate improvement in the tone of the drawings. From that time on NAPOLEON was never annoyed with but one caricature, and that was MAYZ MONSAN'S celebrated drawing which all will remember. In trying to muzzle them, M. THIERS has "roused the ugly," and he is now ridiculed right and left. His suits against the journals have failed, and all of the editors were acquitted except M. TARDIF, on one count relating to BLOIS, for which a fine of five hundred francs was demanded.

THE NEW-YORK FRAUDS.

The Gaulois has just gotten hold of your exposures, and gives the idea thus: "Bourse scandale à New-York et demonti sur théories Démocratiques—les républicains français détournent subsides," practiced for the purpose of buying Democratic votes. "Le gai aux roses a dû découvrir par le New-York Times, &c. &c." I should like to give you a specimen of the Gaulois' English, but as I am as yet unable to make out the words, it must be deferred. ITALY.

The Government and the Island of Sicily—The Opening of Parliament—The Relations with France—Science and Industry—Political Topics—Affairs in Rome.

From Our Own Correspondent.

FLORENCE, Saturday, Sept. 16, 1871.

The Island of Sicily has always been to the Government of the Kingdom of Italy an object of special care. Separated from the main land, and at a distance from the central administration, with its political society composed of many eccentric elements, steadiness and judgment have been needed to preserve order and keep the population up to their patriotic duties. For more than three years Gen. MEDICI, as Commander-in-Chief of the garrison and Prefect of the City of Palermo, has succeeded in maintaining tranquility in the island, and satisfying the expectations of the central power. The solicitude of the Government is now awakened by the wish of Gen. MEDICI to retire from his post, and he has given in his resignation. It is not easy to find a successor, who is sure at the same time to have the confidence of the Government and be able to win the esteem and sympathy of the Sicilians. The resignation of the General is not accepted, and he is urged to keep his place, with the promise of new means to facilitate the administration. The Presidents of the King's Cabinet has come to Florence to confer with Gen. MEDICI, and an appeal to his patriotism has been signed by many of the inhabitants of the island. Sicily is one of the most productive provinces of the Kingdom, and its commerce with the main land has considerably increased since it was liberated from the restraints of a separate Government. Many natives of the island are distinguished in one or another walk of public life; among them may be mentioned Signor CRISPI and the Profs. PARLATORE and AMARI.

THE OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

Although the day for opening Parliament is still some time ahead, the eagerness to see the Senators and Deputies come together for the first time at Rome leads the public to anticipate by days and weeks the moment for the reunion. It is not probable, according to the general belief, that the session will begin much before the middle of November, as there is a good deal of work still to be done in the Palace of Monte Citorio. Much of the furniture of the parliamentary chamber still remains in Florence. It is not yet clear whether the meeting in November will be the beginning of a new session, with a speech from the throne, or a continuation of the present Parliament. Parties are not well made up in the Chamber as at present constituted, and an effort will be made for a new classification. In any event, it is distinctly declared that with new capital and new Deputies' Hall, there must be also a new Ministry, and an effort will be made to bring about a change.

RELATIONS WITH FRANCE.

Signor NEGRA, who has for several years represented Italy at the Court of France, it is thought will be recalled, as his intimacy with the family of the Emperor NAPOLEON was that of too easy relations of a personal friendship to suit the present managers of affairs in France. It is said that M. THIERS, after the adjournment of the Assembly, will come down into Savoy for a little recreation, and that Signor MICHELE-VENOSTA will go up there to have a talk with him. No efforts will be neglected to preserve the good relations at present existing between France and Italy. A good deal was said of the attempt made at Rome to preserve certain convent property to present uses, by obtaining for it the protection of France. The establishment of the Sisters of the Sacred Heart, situated on the pleasant height of the Pincian Hill, is that which seems to have the best claim, as it has always been considered almost a French educational seminary. The Italians are naturally jealous of any interference of the French Minister accredited to the Pope, and of anything that seems like a renewal of foreign intervention in their affairs. The French are hardly yet disposed to give up all claim to have a voice in the settlement of questions in which ecclesiastical interests are involved.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

The Expositions of native products at present open in various cities of Italy are proofs of the reviving industrial life of the nation. There are also many signs given of new intellectual energy everywhere awakened. Conventions are held to stimulate an interest in science, art, mechanical industry and popular instruction, and several of these are now in session. There is one at Naples called the Scholastic Congress, and here in Florence for several days has been held a "Congress" of University Students. They offer occasions for giving eloquent breath to well-directed aspirations, and for laying plans for the accomplishment of practical good. The ancient Academy of the Orisca has held a session this week, at which eulogies were pronounced upon the life and services of LUIGI, CERRARIO, and Prof. SAVI, a learned naturalist, late of the University of Pisa.

POLITICAL TOPICS.

The pamphlet of the Prince NAPOLEON has received quite as much attention from the Italian journals as it deserves. The apology for the BONAPARTES is the first book thrown into the sea by these adventurers, who will soon enough be found fishing for power. The meeting of the two Emperors at Salzburg has more immediate interest for people here; the interview possibly involving some question of European policy. It is believed that German-Austria must be drawn more and more toward the Prussian system, and Italy will match whichever of these she finds at her door.

AFFAIRS IN ROME.

At Rome it is found that much of the ecclesiastical property is less suited to public uses than was in the beginning hoped. Some departments of the Administration, despairing of finding accommodations by any practicable changes to be made in existing structures, have recommended the erection of new edifices as soon as plans can be had. Meanwhile, changes which can be easily made are going on, such as giving new names to streets and public places. As might be expected, Via Victor Emmanuel and Via Garibaldi are among the first of the new names.

GEN. GARIBALDI.

Gen. GARIBALDI has been invited to be present at the anniversary celebration to be held at Rome on the 20th of this month, but whatever his judgment or feelings might lead him to do, it is not probable that the state of his health would make it prudent for him to undergo so much fatigue. Meanwhile, his son RICCIOTTI has accepted a dinner offered him by some of the reduce delle patrie battaglie—returned veterans—at which speeches were made and toasts drank of an extreme Democratic and Republican character. The Government, as well as the most prudent men, would prefer to keep down the extremists, and not give too much detail to the anniversary of the entrance of the troops into Rome, as long as there is danger that the patriotic ardor may be adulterated by manifestations of a violent democratic, socialistic or Communistic character.

AN ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

It will interest more particularly young ladies of sentiment to learn that a few Romans, and visitors to Rome, have this year, for the first time, taken notice of the anniversary of the death of BEATRICE CENCI. In the Church of San Pietro, in Montorio, on the Janiculum Hill, is the grave of the beautiful and unfortunate BEATRICE, and there the simple commemoration was held. The marble that covered the grave was strewn with flowers, and a garland of immortelles bore the name of the one whose ashes have rested there since 1599. It was intended at first to be a demonstration against the Pope, but only a few score were present, and some of these representing the family of the Cenci, and the occasion, as it should, assumed an historic and sentimental, rather than a partisan character.

AMERICANS IN ITALY.

Many American students of music, of both sexes, find Milan, Florence, and Naples favorable places for pursuing their studies. Most American singers who have acquired public reputation have been wholly or in part instructed in the Italian school. Several are now here preparing themselves for the stage, and every year two or three make their first efforts in their difficult career in an Italian theatre. Miss CRANE, of Boston, sang with applause at Siena last Winter, and now she is put down for a conspicuous part for the Autumn season at the great Pagliano Theatre, in Florence. Next year she will sing at Warsaw, a city in which recently several of our Rockers have gained renown. Miss HENRY, of Cincinnati, is to sing the coming Winter at the Rosatini Theatre, in Florence, and another year will perhaps be heard in America. This young artist has repeatedly sung in Florence, in concert music, and has won a favorable judgment, not less for the excellent quality of her voice than the refinement of her style. Miss BARTON, of Boston, brings with her a voice of brilliant quality to receive an Italian training under the well-known Prof. VANNUCCHI. Miss STANWOOD, of Portland, already a thorough musician, is, by study, acquiring new skill to fit her for the operatic stage. The very good quality of the crude material of the American voice is acknowledged, and all that is needed is a painstaking culture to develope the natural powers. Speaking in a general way, it may be said that our national voice shows to less advantage in talking than in singing.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LIMA, Thursday, Sept. 14, 1871.

The political excitement perceptibly increases as the time approaches for the election of President of Peru. The canvass is carried on with the most intense ardor, and has already aroused the bitterest animosities between the rival candidates, of whom there are no less than a dozen in the field. President BALTA has proposed the withdrawal of those candidates for the Presidency from the contest who have the least chance for election. The aspirants all concurred in the President's proposition except PRADO, who had demanded that Don JOSE BALTA, the President's brother, be made the umpire. The opposition Press claim that the certainty of PRADO'S election is beyond all question, while the advocates of the army and clergy candidate, heretofore the most successful, assert that Gen. ECHENIQUE will obtain an overwhelming majority. Whoever is elected President of Peru, he will occupy no enviable or enjoyable position. Peruvians are as little to be depended upon as a Parisian mob.

A very severe earthquake was felt here on the night of the 21st of August, at precisely 8:32 o'clock. The undulations were from north-west to south-east, and were of twenty seconds duration. Great alarm was created, and almost the entire population rushed into the streets, where vast multitudes could be seen on their knees in prayer. The shock was very severe at Corro Azul and Pisco, on the coast. The sea, which previously had become unusually placid, suddenly became very rough and tumultuous, and continued so throughout the next day. No tidal wave or experience of the sort has rolled in upon the coast with great violence. This is only considered the premonitor of a more disastrous shock, and the volcanic eruptions of San Gayass and Rumiragua, in the vicinity of Quinto, have commenced.

The American Consul at Talcahuano has had his exequatur revoked in consequence of personal difficulties of a disagreeable nature having arisen between him and the Republic of Chili.

Conductors in Church.

Eastern papers contain the following little stories which we here bring together:

A good story is told of a popular railroad conductor, recently chosen deacon of a church in Middlesex County, Massachusetts. A few Sundays after his appointment it became his duty to assist in taking up a collection. In his embarrassment he surprised the congregation by starting out with the customary, "Tickets, gentlemen!"

A prominent railroad conductor of sedate habits recently attracted much attention in one of the churches in Portsmouth, N. H., while indulging in a slight nap during sermon time, by exclaiming "Change cars for Gloucester Branch."

POLITICAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER'S NEW PLANS.

He Proposes to Work the Legislature—He will Take the Stump in Favor of "Reform"—How he Proposes to Succeed—The Labor Movement.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Saturday, Sept. 30, 1871.

I have now obtained from the most trustworthy sources BUTLER'S new plan of operations, for it is the fact that he by no means in reality "threw up the sponge" at Worcester, though he earnestly endeavored to have his action so interpreted. His apparently sincere acquiescence in the result of the Convention, and the influential promise of a cordial support to Mr. WASHBURN were but opiates calculated to quiet the nervous anticipations of the faithful as to the eventual course to be pursued by their hitherto sworn enemy. His prestige with the Administration must not be lost, he mentally soliloquized while in the midst of his declaration of love for the party that had preserved the Union, and how to keep it was the problem solving in his ready and always active brain.

HIS MEDITATIONS AND THEIR RESULT.

In the morning after the Convention, at breakfast and on the passage to Boston, he kept himself isolated from friends as well as opponents, evidently in deep meditation, and he was gruff in the extreme to all who sought to engage him in conversation, and it was not until he reached his "tent on the beach," down by Cape Ann, that he revived from his reverie. Then all his material agencies were again set at work. Calling about him his most trusted and discreet followers, he again set them at work. One came to Boston, another went to Charlestown, and still others were sent to other localities. The Legislative, Senatorial and Representative Districts were objects of his immediate solicitude, and control of the "Great and General Court" his objective point, with strategetic designs looking to the maintenance of his hitherto supposed and long-coveted ascendancy in Massachusetts politics. Outward support of Mr. WASHBURN, contrary to the first rumor in regard to BUTLER'S future plans, is still to be maintained. That will be the air of his music; but the changes will be rung on "reform within the party," and the variations, many of them, will be new.

THE LEGISLATURE TO BE WORKED.

The abolition of all commissions was the principal plank of his personal platform which he presented in his extraordinary harangues throughout the State previous to the Convention. But now he is to take a new departure and ride a new hobby in legislative reform, with a view to shortening the sessions of the Legislature. The new idea, like the old, is audacious, and, if plans work, will be presented in the General's well-known forcible style of humor and invective. He proposes to advocate and secure the abolition of all the committees, with, perhaps, an exception of the Judiciary Committee, which he allows is indispensable to the correct legal forms of bills in the present state of education among the ordinary members of the legislative bodies. By this means he pretends to hope for more direct communication and action between the people and their representatives, and consequently a great saving of time by doing away with a second discussion of measures reported. He proposes to address mass meetings in all the principal cities and towns of the State, and advocate this "reform," and that of a shortening of the hours of labor, with a view to keeping himself before the people, and troubling, irritating the present Republican leaders, and breaking their hold on the people. His endeavor is to obtain the control of both branches of the Legislature—and it is a part of his plan to take a hand in its deliberations as a member, since Congress can "spare him"—so that he can be able to say to the Administration that he has in his hand the winning Massachusetts cards in the approaching National Convention, and can alone manage the electoral vote that follows.

THE PRELIMINARY MOVEMENTS.

The plan having been agreed upon, BUTLER'S emissaries have begun their work. They go about it in a confident and deliciously abrupt manner, as witness the following interview between one of them and a prominent politician of this city—a third person being present:

BUTLER EMISSARY (to politician aside)—Is your friend favorable to our view of the situation?

POLITICIAN—You can proceed.

EMISSARY—How many voters favorable to Gen. BUTLER'S views are there in your locality?

POLITICIAN—About four hundred.

EMISSARY—Can you make an accurate estimate within the next ten days?

POLITICIAN—I can, and will.

EMISSARY—Will you obtain a good list of their signatures to a communication inviting the General to speak in your district at the end of the time alluded to?

The matter was arranged and the parties separated. An arrangement similar to that above given has also already been made in Charlestown, where the "reform" element is known to be strong, and as I write an authentic report comes from Haverhill to the same effect. The above is the plan, and the means and arguments that are to be used in carrying it out, now decided upon by the great but thus far unsuccessful disorganizer. To what extent it will succeed remains to be seen. He certainly means to work it, and feel the public pulse in the party. The consequence will be a lively and exciting canvass after all, one in which good Republicans will have to work as they have'n't for some years past.

THE LABOR REFORMERS.

In order to carry out his plans BUTLER needs, and he knows it, the support and the help of the men of the Labor Reform Party. He, therefore, has been urging the managers to forego a nomination for Governor at their Convention, next Wednesday, and trust to him for advancement during the year. But they have so far stubbornly refused. They have not yet recovered their tempers, though they have so far been influenced by the wily politician that they pity rather than blame him for his course at Worcester. Their choice for Governor will be CHAMBERLAIN, their first standard-bearer, and not Judge COWLEY. WENDELL PHILLIPS having pronounced for him as the better man of the two, being the best known by laboring men in all parts of the State. They declare that without their help BUTLER wouldn't have had more than two hundred delegates in the Worcester Convention, and in consequence of the agitation in behalf of labor through BUTLER, they hope to poll a large vote, and if they do not elect their own man, to cut down the vote of WASHBURN so that ADAMS may step into the Gubernatorial chair.

What the Chairmen of the Democratic Talents of Him Now—Butler's Lost Opportunities and Mistakes—Mr. Phillips' Opinion of the New-York Times.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Sunday, Oct. 1, 1871.

Yesterday I had a conversation with Mr. WENDELL PHILLIPS about the defeat of his candidate, BUTLER, at the Worcester Convention, and his subsequent action. I found him at the head-quarters of the Labor Reformers, in one of the upper offices of the Merchants' Exchange, where he was endeavoring to convince some of the other leaders of the Labor faction that nothing could be done with BUTLER as a candidate now, in view of his speech pledging himself to abide by the decision of the Convention, and that CHAMBERLAIN, the first candidate of the Labor Reform Party when it was organized two years ago, must be made the candidate at the Convention next Wednesday. He was about starting to take the cars for his Summer-house in Swampscott, and at his invitation I accompanied him to the Eastern Station, that we might talk at ease. About BUTLER he said: He wasn't prepared to denounce him as some had done for his action, at Worcester. BUTLER was a politician, and a strong manager, and he wouldn't have taken the step he did if he didn't think it was the best thing for the masses he advocated, as well as himself. He couldn't afford to go out of the Republican Party, and he couldn't afford to bolt from the Convention at Worcester unless he was sure of victory at the polls. He should BUTLER made some serious mistakes before he went to Worcester, as well as at the Convention. For instance, neither he nor his managers instituted any moral influence of the suppressed, expected from CHARLES SUMNER. He is a power in Massachusetts, and no more criticism from BUTLER can break his hold on the people. Only on the shoulders of GRANT can he be recalled with any effect. Then he did not thoroughly comprehend the extent of the moral support he received from the working men—the men of the Labor Reform Party. They supported him on principle. They, as a party, represented a principle. They supported him because they saw in him the man who would carry out the reforms they advocated, not because he was BENJAMIN F. BUTLER, and if he had given them the chance, they would have sent him into the Executive chair on a tide of enthusiasm. He thought that BUTLER neglected a noble opportunity at Worcester. He could have said: "Gentlemen, I came up here to have a labor reform plank put into the Republican platform. Put it in, and I will abide by your action; leave it out, and I will go out from you with my five hundred delegates, and make a true Republican plank." He thought BUTLER had the Convention with him when it assembled, and if he could have held it together without recess, he would have been nominated.

About BUTLER'S popularity, Mr. PHILLIPS said, though a shrewd politician, a wonderful party manager, and an extraordinary man, he alone could not have created the enthusiasm that was manifested for him throughout the Commonwealth in the short time he had to work up the canvass. It was because the hour had come when a live man was wanted in the Executive chair, and he was recognized as that man. The people held out their hands to him and called him to come and help them. He was without exception the people's choice, and today, Mr. PHILLIPS believed, if the people could have the opportunity to speak out their choice for Governor, it would be BUTLER clear and with distinctness. "Do you suppose," said Mr. PHILLIPS, "that by all his party management he could have defeated Senator WILSON at Natick, ROBINSON ("Warrington" of the Springfield Republican) at Malden, and carried Springfield against the Republican newspaper, without the aid of the people? WILSON is a popular man in Natick; gives all his friends office; so is ROBINSON in Malden; but when the contest came, the people, feeling that the time had come for them to decide between a live and a dead man, pushed them aside, shelved them at once, as they were against the man of their choice. Mr. PHILLIPS denied that BUTLER made explicit promises to run at any event as a candidate, and said that the strongest statement he at any time made was that if CHARLIE was trotted out simply to kill him off, notwithstanding his withdrawal he'd run, no matter what obstacles were in the way. Mr. PHILLIPS thinks that BUTLER made a great mistake in making that final speech. He thinks he made up his mind too quickly. He don't believe BUTLER contemplated making the speech fifteen minutes before he was on the platform delivering it. BUTLER, he thinks, could have got on without declaring himself, and still kept to the Republican Party. He owed it to his friends to consult them before he made such an important move. He could very properly have left himself in the hands of his friends. It would have been better if he had made no speech at all after the nomination.

Mr. PHILLIPS casually alluded to the contest going on in New-York against the Tammany thieves, and took occasion to speak of the TIMES in terms of unqualified praise. "I know nothing grander," he said, "than the noble fight of that paper, conducted single-handed and in the face of the bitterest and most dangerous opposition. If the Ring is broken it will be more than anything else the work of the TIMES."

VIRGINIA.

General Depression on Account of Bad Crops—Condition of the Colored People—Their Influence Carried—Future Success of the Republican Party Assured.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CULPEPER COURT-HOUSE, Va., Wednesday, Sept. 27, 1871.

The political cauldron is boiling here, where is always simmers, and where there is always smoke and any quantity of steam. It is boiling now because of the near approach of the Fall elections. Town meetings, county conventions and State conventions are the order of the day. Everybody is more or less interested in them; but there is not that absorbing, reckless and overshadowing interest of the days before the war. Nevertheless, there is more excitement throughout the State than there would be on any Northern community under similar provocation. The truth is that many laws, mortgages and bonds, passed and given after the close of the war, are just now expiring, and the people are paying more attention to the Sheriffs elected last year than to the officers to be elected this Fall. In this section of the State, and way up in the Blue Ridge region, the crops did not turn out well, and the dry weather has almost destroyed the pastures. In the low land the fruit crop was a failure, while in the mountains apples "are right smart," as they say here. The consequence is that the tax-payers, with two years' taxes to pay now, owing to the blunders of the State Legislature, are almost entirely out of money. Never before, since the war at least, has there been such general stagnation in business as this season of the year. Long faces and empty pockets are to be seen and heard of everywhere. The air seems burdened with complaints and gloomy prophecies of future failures. In short, the people here are greatly dispirited. I mean the white people—the tax-payers, of course—but the blacks also feel the depression, and were it not for their careless manner of life they would join the general chorus of groans. As it is they seem content to plod on in their customary way, answer "we did do Freedmen's," and working as well as they ever did before, which is not saying much. However, they do nearly all the work that is done here, and if the whites who own land have not money to hire them, the land, crops in some instances, is either rented to poor whites or lies idle. Not one in a thousand of whites in the country districts have improved their condition since their freedom. They live in huts as they used to in slave times, sleep on the ground or floor, wear rags, and are, perhaps, not quite as conscientious about title to movable property as in former days. They work from year's end to year's end, and are no better off when settlement day comes than when they commenced. They have lost much of the intrepid devotion to the Republican Party that they had at the close of the war, and have no longer the most implicit reliance in every "Yankee," or Northern man, they meet. However, as a mass they are Republicans, and will continue such so long as the whites use the word nigger, or decry the evident difference between the races. They have forgotten the animosities and grudges of the past, and only remember or think of the injuries of the present. They never will forget the debt they owe for their freedom, and while the remembrance of slavery lasts they will not fail to show becoming gratitude to the party that was instrumental in procuring for them that precious boon. So it happens that when an ex-[illegible] rooted as ex-slave holder joins the ranks of the Republican Party, they support him with great vigor. In fact, I think they prefer men of that kind. No matter how violent they may have been as secessionists or Democrats, to Northerners, and when they are called on to vote for an original Union man they do it with a vim and enthusiasm worthy of imitation even by the drilled and disciplined voters of close districts in the North.

BRYANT'S HOMER.

THE ODYSSEY OF HOMER. Translated into English blank verse. By WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT. Vol. I. Imperial 8vo., pp. 524. Boston: JAMES R. OSGOOD & Co.

MR. BRYANT'S great task of translation approaches its end—for him indeed, we suppose, is ended; for here we have the first twelve books of the Odyssey, in the same sumptuous form in which his version of the Iliad first appeared, and we may be sure that the remaining twelve are already in the printer's hands. It is a matter of sincere national congratulation that a version of the great Greek epic was undertaken and has been completed by that one of our native poets who was best fitted for the task, whose clearness and simplicity of style, whose genuineness of feeling and severity of taste, and whose power of sustained dignity of expression bring him into such direct sympathy with his author. Criticism by mere comparison is poor; and perhaps it cannot be truly said that Mr. BRYANT'S is in every respect and in all points the best English version of Homer; but we will venture to say that it is the most readable of all the English versions; that in the combination of faithfulness and spirit it has no superior, if it have a rival; and will venture also the prediction that it will hereafter be the most frequently read of any.

The few—and even among those that are called scholars they are very few—who are able to read a Greek epic poem or tragedy continuously through in the original with real enjoyment, will object to this version, that they miss in it the rapid flow and the almost undying fire of the blind bard's song. But this criticism is equally true of every other English translation, and we might safely say of all translations of these poems. It is notably so of CHAPMAN'S, which is much praised on opposite grounds, chiefly, we must believe, by those who have never read it through, and who are content to repeat at second hand the extravagant laudations which a first acquaintance with it elicited from the morbidly sensitive nature and ill-balanced, thoroughly uncritical mind of KEATS. The comparative sluggishness of movement to which we refer is in a great measure, if not entirely, the result of the difference of rhythm between the Greek hexameter and the English blank verse. Being so, it must be accepted as unavoidable; for English hexameters thus far have been, and from the nature of English prosody ever must be, only a weak and hobbling caricature of the Greek. This is true of them even in a short poem; and the reading of a long English poem in hexameter, or so-called hexameter verse, is one of the most wearisome semblances of literary pleasure yet devised by human ingenuity. In our language a rush, in narrative poetry, is attainable only in the octosyllabic line. SCOTT attained it often; BYRON sometimes. But the fatal facility of that verse, and its lack of weight and dignity, make it particularly unfit as a representative of HOMER'S massive although quickly-moving style. It has rapidity without momentum; it is too thin. We may be sure that if HOMER were to write in English, he would use not the octosyllabic or the hexameter verse, or even the heroic couplet, but blank verse; and Mr. BRYANT'S choice, directed by sound taste, has been vindicated in the execution.

In the preface to this volume, Mr. BRYANT defends himself against adverse criticism of his use of the Latin names of the Greek gods—Jupiter, Juno, Neptune, Pluto, Mars, Minerva, Venus, and the rest, instead of Zeus, Heré, Poseidon, Hades, Ares, Pallas and Aphrodité. He does this on the ground that those names—the Latin—are naturalized by a usage of six hundred years, that all our poets and great writers from CHAUCER have used them, that to each of those names there is annexed in the mind of the English reader, for whom the translation is made, a peculiar set of attributes; but that if the Greek names were substituted for them, the reader in question, unless he were somewhat a Greek scholar, would be obliged to turn to his classical dictionary. He adds, forcibly, that "we talk (he means we, of English race, but might justly have said that all people, whether scholars or not, and of what nation soever, talk) of the Venus of Milo, the Venus of Medicis, the Jupiter of Phidias, and never think of calling a statue of Mars a statue of Ares." The defense is good, and it would seem that the usage in question is too long and too firmly rooted to be disregarded or changed. But, on the other hand, it should be remembered that the Latin names came into our language merely because our earlier writers did not know the Greek ones; for before the year 525, there were probably not a dozen men in England who could read Greek, certainly not a single poet—that is making HOMER speak of Jupiter and Juno, names are put into his mouth with which he was entirely unacquainted,—and that the Greek names are not only the right ones, but much more beautiful, more suited to poetical use than the Latin. How much finer, for instance, is Persephoné than Proserpina, Demeter than Ceres, Aphroditè than Venus. The point, however, is not very essential, and the Latin names will not fail any reader, unless he is somewhat captious and pedantic, mar the enjoyment of Mr. BRYANT'S noble and highly-finished work.

Mr. BRYANT also alludes in his preface to a difference of style between the Iliad and the Odyssey which supports the opinion held by some of the most learned and accomplished critics that these poems were not written by the same author. Mr. BRYANT expresses no opinion upon this point, which, even if we deemed ourselves competent, we should not here discuss. But the difference, patent to all critics, and disputed by none, is one which is of very considerable moment to the general reader. For by this difference of style and treatment, no less than by an equal difference in the nature of the subject, the Odyssey is a much more interesting poem to any modern reader than the Iliad. The Iliad was the great national poem of the Greek peoples. The traditions, the religion, and the origin and glory of the heroes and demigods to whom the great Greek families delighted to trace their origin, were there embodied in immortal song. The parts of it which are least attractive, and to speak candidly, often wearisome to modern readers, the incessant combats, the catalogues of men and ships, and the genealogies, were just those in which a Greek took a personal interest. The Iliad, with the combats left out, would have been to him like SHAKESPEARE'S great philosophical tragedy without the Prince. But those vivid descriptions of bloody strife in which we are told, with the particularity of the evidence before a Coroner's jury, just where the spear or the sword entered and what kind of wound it made, and how the wounded hero screamed, are foreign to our taste. The Morte d'Arthur is a great romance—one of those few compositions to which the epithet immortal may be rightfully applied. But in that the continual jousting becomes oppressive. A great combat, in which the principal personages engage, which is described with spirit, and which produces an appreciable effect on the progress of events, is a stirring and a picturesque incident; but we soon grew tired of being told how then, that, or the other pair of knights "fronted their spears" at about notice and pitched each other out of their saddles upon the plain. It becomes ghastly as monotonously sanguinary as the reports of the political consultations and festive gatherings of the supporters of the Ring. From this forbidding trait the Odyssey is entirely free. While it is so far removed from us in time, in the nature of its incidents, in manners and customs, in its machinery and in costume, to present to us the strangeness and the novelty of almost another world, its chief interest is of a purely human, and, in a great measure, of a domestic character. A faithful and beautiful wife, who is tormented by the brutal cupidity of a horde of solitudinous suitors that devour her substance and keep her household in an uproar—an ingenuous and simple-hearted although discreet youth, her son, who frets over his inability to protect his mother, and longs for the return of a father whom he cannot remember,—a victorious soldier, who is buffeted by fate and tempted by fortune in a long journey homeward, which, in fact, becomes a checkered wandering through the then known world, and indeed beyond its boundaries,—these are the elements of interest in the Odyssey. Minerva, who takes father and son into her protection and carries them triumphantly through their troubles, defeating the machinations of Neptune, the evil genius of the tale, is, notwithstanding her goddess-like traits, more of a genial, good fairy than a Jove-born dweller on Olympus. The Odyssey has thus very much more of a modern air than the Iliad; not merely that in which some critics find evidence of its having been composed in a later age than that in which the poem to which it is the sequel must have been written, but a certain air of homeliness, a flavor of simple humanity, a power of awakening in modern breasts a direct individual sympathy with its personages, which is hardly to be found in any other epic or dramatic composition in the literature of Greece and Rome. We are sure that there must be many among even the intelligent and best educated among our readers who have not read the Odyssey, and them we advise to choose this as the next book they read for pure pleasure. Let them read it as a mere story of human love, and faith, and trial, and suffering, and adventure. We assure them that they have never read such another—one in which the interest is so completely and equally sustained from the beginning to the end, or one more artfully and at the same time more simply constructed. As a mere story, divested of all poetical ornament, and told in plain and simple prose, it is almost without a rival in the whole range of literature. Even it too, the Greek mythology in its highest and purest form, and the constitution of Greek society, its manners, customs, and habits of thought and feeling, can be learned better than from a heap of classical dictionaries.

Mr. BRYANT'S version of this great poem is, as we have already implied, the most attractive and readable of all that are known to us. It has a simple dignity without boldness, a clearness and directness of expression, and a manly muscularity of phrase with all the smoothness of its verse, that suit the subject and represent the style of the author as well as it would seem that can be represented in English verse. As we do not propose entering into a close comparison of this version with those of other translators, we shall give no extracts from it. We have looked for one to present to our readers as an example at once of Mr. BRYANT'S success and of the character of the original poem: but we have looked in vain. No really great poem can be adequately represented by extracts, and of all poems and poets this poem and this poet, least. For its beauty is eminently the beauty of a grand and perfect whole. It is the design, the completeness of the execution, the sustained power, the continuity of interest, the fitness of the parts to the whole, rather than the peculiar beauty of any one passage which give a great work like this its superiority and its enduring beauty and interest. We could not, therefore, give an extract from it by which it would not be really misrepresented, unless we chose one altogether too long for the columns of a daily newspaper. As to minute verbal criticism, we had marked half a dozen passages, with the purpose of showing that the translator might, perhaps, have given a more faithful or more vivid, rendering of the original. But this, after all, as we are not writing for scholars, would be a superfluous, as it would have also been an ungrateful and perhaps a hypercritical task; and we prefer the worthier and more agreeable function of commendation, which we can perform heartily and without reserve. Mr. BRYANT'S version of the Odyssey will add much to his great reputation, and repeats the assurance given by his Iliad, that his completed work will bring high honor to his country by the hand from whom it would be most welcome.

LIFE OF JOHN STERLING. By THOMAS CARLYLE. OLIVER CROMWELL'S LETTERS AND SPEECHES. By THOMAS CARLYLE. Vol. I. New-York: SCRIBNER, WELFORD & CO. 1871.

These volumes form part of the complete republication of Mr. CARLYLE'S works, in a cheap and convenient form. Of the first volume, Sartor Resartus, over 30,000 copies were sold in England, and it had a proportionately large sale in this country. Yet to those who are about to read CARLYLE for the first time, the Life of Sterling may be commended in preference to Sartor Resartus, as a charming piece of biography, and contains fewer eccentricities of CARLYLE'S style than any other of his books, except the Essays.

The Life of Cromwell, like the same author's History of the French Revolution, is a work of the highest historical value. It has completely superseded all other biographies of the great Protector.

People who possess the more costly editions of CARLYLE might with advantage buy this one. It is only ninety cents a volume, and it will always be found handy for railroad reading, or for the country and the seaside. The type is large and clear, and the paper excellent. A cheaper book was never offered to the public.

CICERO. By REV. W. LUCAS COLLINS, M. A. Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & CO.

This is another volume in the well-known and popular series of ancient classics for English readers. A clear and satisfactory account is given of CICERO'S life and works, and there are few readers who may not find entertainment and instruction from Mr. COLLINS' pages. The entire series is well worthy of being added to every good library.

This is the best account of the "Seventy-three days of the second siege" which has yet appeared. Now is the time to collect contemporary works on the wonderful events so recently witnessed in Paris—and so soon half forgotten!—and Mr. LEIGHTON'S cartoon book ought to be possessed with unusual care, for it is filled with illustrations from sketches taken on the spot, portraits of the principal actors in those scenes, plans, and other material for the future historian. The reading matter is extremely interesting, and, altogether, this book may be warmly recommended to the notice of the public.

—Messrs. JAMES R. OSGOOD & CO. (Boston) have recently published a beautifully-printed edition of BRYANT'S Iliad, in two volumes. The size is more convenient than that of the first edition, and in the present shape Mr. BRYANT'S admirable translation will doubtless have a large sale. It is now brought within the reach of persons of the most moderate means.—Messrs. OSGOOD & CO. have also published The Member for Paris, a most interesting "tale of the Second Empire." Their weekly paper, Every Saturday, continues to increase in attractiveness and prosperity.

THE INDIAN TRIBES.

Their Numbers, Wealth and Power—A Careful Statement of Their Present Condition and Prospects.

The following interesting letter has been addressed to Hon. ROBERT CAMPBELL, of St. Louis, and although not intended for publication, contains so clear an account of the present condition of the Indian tribes in the Rocky Mountain region that he has permitted it to be printed in the St. Louis Republican, from whose columns we quote it:

DEER LODGE CITY, Montana, Sept. 8, 1871.

Hon. Robert Campbell, Indian Peace Commissioner, St. Louis, Mo.:

DEAR SIR: Knowing that you were familiar many years ago, with the numbers, wealth and power of most of the Indian tribes of the Rocky Mountains, I have thought that it might interest you to hear what their present condition and prospects are. For the past seventeen years I have lived in the Rocky Mountains, and hence have been in constant contact with all the tribes from Colorado to the British line; and thus becoming thoroughly conversant with their customs, habits, languages and modes of life, has caused me to take a very great interest in the way our Indian affairs are managed, and led me to desire to see them conducted upon some plan that would do more equal and exact justice to both whites and Indians. That the matter has been very badly managed in the past is patent to any observing mind.

At the beginning of the tide of emigration that left the Eastern States and swept across the continent to California and Oregon, the many tribes along the routes were numerous and in general prosperous; but the contact with the whites produced the heretofore inevitable decline in numbers and abasement of character which seems to follow like a curse in the footsteps of civilization and to fall with a blighting influence upon the natives of the soil. This is owing principally to the introduction among them of whiskey and other evils attendant upon it, to produce famine, disease, poverty, dissensions and wars among themselves and with the whites, and is leading to the rapid extermination of all the tribes of the mountains and plains of the great West, some of whom have already declined so far as to have lost their tribal names, and, to prevent their utter extinction, have become incorporated into other and stronger tribes.

"WASHAKEE'S" band of Shoshonees, or Snakes, who formerly ranged from Bear River to the mouth of Sweetwater River, are now upon a reservation in Wind River Valley. They are very much reduced in numbers, and are almost entirely dependent upon the Indian Department for a living, as the game is now so little, and but few elk, deer or antelope in their country. They are located in a beautiful valley, and seem to be contented and desire to learn to farm, and, if properly managed and cared for, will soon cease their nomadic life and quit the chase for the more quiet pursuits of raising stock and tilling the soil. They are not at war with any other tribe, except the Sioux, who will persist in coming to their reservations, and steal their horses, and occasionally kill some of them. They complain, and justly too, that Government does not protect them on their reservations.

The "Sheep-Eater" band of Snakes and the Bannacks, who formerly ranged from the head almost to the mouth of Snake River, are now locally on a reservation at Lemhi, near the forks of Salmon River, and, on another, on a near old Fort Hall on Snake River. The first-named reservation has a farm in operation on a small scale, and these Indians, who are naturally of the most gentle and tractable disposition of any of the mountain tribes, are glad to learn how to farm, and have willingly done everything they have been set to by the benefit of their labor. There is no game in their country except a few mountain sheep, and they do not leave the reservations to hunt, but live on the products of the farm, their annuities, and salmon, of which latter there is abundance in Salmon River. The farm has only been in operation about a year, and now they have sixty-five acres under cultivation, which is doing very well, considering the limited means at the disposal of the agent.

The Flatheads and Pend Oreilles are now partially civilized. They have farms of their own, generally on their reservations in the Bitter Root and Jocko Valleys. They are in comfortable circumstances, have large bands of horses and many cattle. Owing to the labors of the Jesuit missionaries, who have had a few missions among them since 1845, they attend church with considerable regularity, and profess the Catholic religion, and are usually married by the rites of the church. These Indians are quiet and peaceable. A portion of them still make semi-annual trips to the Yellow-stone and Missouri Rivers to hunt buffalo, but if they are properly managed for a few years they will become self-sustaining and will cease to go after buffalo and will become permanent residents on their farms.

The Nez Perces are rapidly becoming civilized, and stay mostly on their reservations on Lapwai and Clear Water, and the Columbia; they are rich in horses and cattle, and farm to a considerable extent. A small part of them still go with the Flat-heads and Pend'Oreilles as hunt on the plains of the Missouri and Yellow-stone, but they can easily be induced to stay at home. They are quiet and well-disposed, and are quite intelligent. Some of them can speak abundant in their country, the time is not far distant when they will be compelled to farm or starve, and they fully appreciate the kindness of the Government in giving them annuities and learning them how to farm.

The Blackfeet and Piegans have an agency and farm on the Teton River, which has some eighty acres under cultivation, but as game is still abundant in particular, is abundant in their country, they take but little interest in farming operations as yet, although the more intelligent among them admit that they will have to farm some day, although they think the time farther off than it really is.

The greatest difficulty which is experienced in keeping the Indians on their agencies and on their reservations is caused by interested and unprincipled men, who are interested in trading whisky to them. They persuade the Indians to leave their agencies and go into the Indian country out of the reach of their agents, so that they can trade them whisky with impunity, and nothing but the unceasing vigilance of Indian Superintendent J. H. VIALL keeps this orgie evil within bounds. He has taken energetic measures to suppress this atrocious traffic, and if properly supported will soon succeed in bringing to justice or driving out of the country all those nefarious scoundrels who are engaged in it. I look upon this whisky trading as a crime but little less than actual murder, for it brings with it a long train of attendant evils which are productive of a vast sum of human misery.

Owing to the judicious administration of Indian affairs by Superintendent VIALL, there is a more contented feeling among all the Indians of this Territory than there has ever been before. They see and know that he is using all means in his power to promote their comfort and welfare, and had our Indian affairs been managed in the past with as much justice and good faith Superintendent VIALL would have had fewer bloody and expensive Indian wars, and less of the hostile and suspicious feeling, that long years of injustice, false promises and bad faith have engendered in the mind of the Indian, till he has grown to look on all our promises as mere subterfuges to swindle him. The total lack of good faith shown by our Government, and the slight punishment that is sometimes inflicted on the Indians when they break the many treaties made with them, has caused the Indians to look on all treaties as a farce that either party can ignore at will.

How long we can make a treaty with any tribe we should observe is to the letter, and should make them do the same, and unless this is done no treaty will ever be observed for any length of time. The whites are almost invariably the first to break treaty stipulations, and then they wage war on the poor Indian for following their example.

The dictates of humanity demand that the Indians should be put on reservations, and fed and clothed by Government until they become sufficiently instructed in the arts of civilized life to sustain themselves. The onward march of civilization is fast exterminating the noble red man, who was once the undisputed owners of all this fair land. They have suffered great injustice and cruelty, and unless their now have protection from the strong arm of the Government, in a few short years their place will know them no more. I remain, very truly yours,

GRANVILLE STUART.

SOME REASONS FOR REFORM.

THE DISAPPEARING PARKS.

How Willing to Obliterate Them for Greenbacks—Judge Hilton's Lots of Fifty-Sixth-street.

The friends of Judge [illegible] HILTON have claimed for him in his administration of the public parks an economy amounting to absolute parsimony. Numerous instances have been quoted where he has effected savings in small matters, and these have not been controverted. But the general exhibit of expenditure which appeared in the communications to the Controller showed a monstrous extravagance in the gross, somewhat hard to reconcile with the undoubted economy in detail. Men ask, Where can the money have gone? and are told that the parks have been greatly improved; that the construction of the boulevards has rapidly progressed, and that the streets and the avenues under the supervision of the Department have been filled and graded to a very large extent. Granted that this is true; yet still the expenditure is enormous, even for these results, which there is no desire to see in any quarter to undervalue, though the improvements in the parks are more than doubtful. Still the question return: "What has become of the money?"

The answer to this is not difficult to give. The number of men employed in the Department is infinitely greater than it need be. This excess is brought about by the system adopted by the Department to get filling for the grading of streets and avenues. For this system Mr. HILTON is not responsible, since it was practiced by Mr. KELLOGG under the old Commissioners. But at that time it was done honestly, and was a saving to the City; now it is done corruptly, and is a source of great loss. This system is the excavating of cellars and the grading of lots by the Central Park workmen for the sake of the filling. When Mr. KELLOGG inaugurated this, during the grading of Sixth-avenue, the lots so excavated were all in immediate proximity with that avenue. The great source of expense is in the carrying it to the dumping-ground. This was obviated then, and the City did really effect a saving. But now lots are excavated in all parts of the City, sometimes fully two miles from the part of Eighth-avenue that is being graded. The expense of carrying it that distance would be something terrible. For the sake of illustration, the public may consider the case of a lot excavated by the Department on Seventy-sixth-street and Avenue A, part of which was rock. This cellar was eleven feet deep, twenty-five feet front, and sixty feet deep, or 550 cubic yards. A contractor would excavate this for sixty cents a cubic yard, provided that he could make arrangements for dumping the earth in the vicinity. If he could not make any such arrangement, he would charge seventy cents. Now the sixty cents a cubic yard may be taken as the cost of excavating, which it confessedly is, according to the testimony of all contractors. They rely for their profits on what they can get for the earth they dump. When the Department of Public Works is filling up a street or dock, the man who has the contract stations a clerk where the earth is wanted. He gives to every cart of earth dumped there a ticket, and at the end of the week the tickets are cashed for ten cents apiece. Thus, then, is the true profit of the excavator. But if the carts have to traverse an immense space, as in the case of the lot on Avenue A, the cost of such a transit would, according to a contractor, be close on two dollars a cubic yard. The original expense of excavating the cellar was $333, or rather would have been if a private contractor had done the job. Add to this $1,100, the cost of dumping it on Eighth-avenue, and the total expense amounts to $1,433. But on Judge HILTON'S pretty books this does not show at all. On the contrary, the filling is put down as gratis, and the real expense is hidden under the general head of labor.

It must not be supposed that this is an isolated case. It is one of very many. Not to mention Judge HILTON'S own lots on Fifty-sixth-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues, where the Department is blasting away some twenty feet of surface rock, nor FERNANDO WOOD'S little property on the corner of Seventy-eighth-street and Eleventh-avenue, there are many others which can be named. The contractor who has engaged to excavate a cellar sues one of the subforemen of the public parks, slips a hundred dollar bill in his hand, and arranges that the public parks shall excavate the cellar on condition of having the filling for nothing. Now as the Park can have at any time all the filling it wants for it as per cubic yard, the advantage to the citizens of paying nothing for the earth and $14 25 for the labor is something that nobody can see who does not wear Tammany spectacles.

But even this calculation supposes that no more men and no more teams are employed than ordinary contractors would engage. The Park Department has nearly twice as many. If any reader of the TIMES is anxious to know how slowly men can work on emergencies, or how many men it can take to do a small job of digging, he is respectfully invited to watch the laborers of this Department. Madison-square Afforded recently, and probably does even now, some of the liveliest instances of lazy laborers that civilization ever witnessed. There was an one of the gangs employed here a [illegible]-eared, bloated-faced man who wore long black curls, that looked as if part of a wig, but were really genuine. This specimen of a rumsucker had generally a spade or a rake in his hand, which he would slowly use for half a minute, and would then cease as if thoroughly exhausted. Two-thirds of his time was passed in lighting his pipe, and the remainder was divided between ogling passing females and reluctantly handling his spade. He was treated with great respect by the saucer or greenhorn, and was perhaps a decayed politician. But such as he abound in the Department and draw their money with the utmost regularity. Such laborers, it is obvious, will not do half as much as the genuine sons of toil in the service of the contractors, more especially when they have to work only eight hours to the ten of outsiders. The carts of the Department also are smaller than others of the same nature, and are seldom properly filled. These things being considered, it will hardly seem exaggeration to say that when the 550 cubic yards of earth have been dumped on Eighth-avenue they have cost upwards of $2,000. Contrast this sum, which is the real one under Judge HILTON'S survey, with the 550 40, which it should have cost at 40 per cubic yard, the Proper price, and the economy of the present Administration of the Public Parks is seen to be a detestable sham. Yet that notorious trickster, TOM FIELDS, boasted that the Department had furnished 325,500 cubic yards of filling for only a trifle more than the old Board had paid for 37,500 yards.

The same delightful economy has been practiced in obtaining stone for walls and foundations, and there is too much reason to fear that the virtuous HILTON himself has fallen from grace, and has used his position as executive officer of the Public Parks to his own pecuniary advantage and that of his friends. The facts are these. Last year Judge HILTON became possessed of lots Nos. 37, 38, 39, 40 and 41 on Fifty-sixth-street, between Sixth and Seventh avenues. These lots commence 100 feet from Sixth-avenue and extend 125 feet on Fifty-sixth-street in a westerly direction. They all are, or have been, covered with a rock ledge, which reaching up to an exact height of twenty feet. For some time past this stone has been quarried by the Central Park authorities, who employ there, as nearly as can be ascertained, a gang of twenty laborers, a foreman and assistant, and five teams. Rumor, which delights in defaming the most illustrious and the most virtuous, asserted loudly that Judge HILTON received a large amount for the stone which was thus taken from his lots. A reporter of the TIMES was sent to investigate the matter, and he, after inspecting the workmen at their labors, and hearing the remarks of the neighbors, went straight to the head-quarters and interviewed Mr. KELLOGG, the Superintendent, at his office in Mount St. Vincent. That gentleman repelled with great warmth the idea that Judge HILTON had ever received a penny from the Department for his stone, and explained the matter in this way:

"You see the Legislature have again offered the grade of Eighth-avenue. The consequence is that the western slope of the Central Park has to be changed to suit; new foundations have to be laid for walls, the direction of the contiguous roads has to be altered, and the entrances of the transverse roads have to be reconstructed. Now this necessitates large quantities of stone precisely of the kind and quality that we find on Judge HILTON'S lots. I take that because it is the nearest I can get.

REPORTER—Isn't it rather an unusual proceeding?

KELLOGG—No, certainly not. Half of Sixth-avenue was graded in the same way. I wanted earth and filling, and I agreed with people who had building lots to excavate their cellars for them gratis, just to have the carts, and it [illegible]

[illegible] earth, water [illegible] now a lot [illegible]

KELLOGG—Certainly. It is the first case of the kind, but the Park is worth more than a few dollars, especially as the City has the best of the bargain. Judge HILTON behaved in the handsomest manner about it. I told him that we wanted stone. He said that if the stone on his lots would be of any service to the Park he would be most happy to let us take it for nothing. He never had the least idea of being paid for it. He said distinctly, that I was to take what I wanted and to leave what I did not want, no matter what the condition of the lots might be when I left them.

REPORTER—This was very handsome and public-spirited on his part, was it not?

KELLOGG—Oh, very.

This concluded the interview, and the reporter next sought a gentleman who very recently owned one of the lots adjacent to Judge HILTON'S. It is furnished with a towering mass of similar rock, of almost the same height. The gentleman said that he had bought it without a preliminary inspection, and when he found what it would cost to have it graded, sold it again without any more ado. The expense of grading a single lot would be at the least $4,000 for the surface rock alone. This seemed to depreciate the value of HILTON'S generously very materially, and when the reporter saw a rock excavator, the boss was very completely on the other leg; or, to be plain, HILTON'S generosity was nothing but a job.

This contractor said that his price for removing rock was on the average from $3 to $4 50 for grading and sub-grading. But it all depended upon circumstances. If the stone was of good quality, $3 for foundations and for walls, and especially for those large stones placed underneath the foundation walls, then he would do it for $1 50 if he could make arrangements to use the stone in a continuous piece. The hauling it was, of course, one of the greatest sources of expense. The price, $1 50, would not pay him, or nearly pay him, but his profit came from the stone. This always belonged to the excavator, but it was customary to leave in the line of sufficient stone for the foundation walls. He considered the stone on HILTON'S lots as very good, and would do it for $1 50 per cubic yard, and make money on it, too.

From these statements it appears that Judge HILTON is indebted to the City for excavating the rock on his five lots. As the stone is the property of the excavator, and is an important consideration in the price of such labor, it cannot be pleaded as a set-off. The account, therefore, between the City and the executive officer of the Department of Public Parks should stand thus:

JUDGE HILTON, Dr.

To the Department of Public Parks, for grading and subgrading five lots on Fifty-sixth-street, say.....$18,000

WHAT OF THE VIADUCT?

Another Direction of Hilton's Grand Scheme—The Impossibilities of the Week.

What has become of the Great Chinese Wall or Viaduct Railway? Has the late smash-up of other Ring schemes brought this also to a stand still? The patient public or that part of it which is doomed still to cram horse-cars to the number of seventy persons per car, impelling the philanthropist of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, to interpose his efforts for prevention of cruelty to humanity, would like to know something of its progress.

Months ago the columns of some of our City journals displayed elaborate diagrams of the route to be traversed and wood-cuts of structures to be erected in this gigantic Ring work of masonry. Commencing at its "lower depot on the site of the old Tryon-row, with a handsome façade in the German renaissance style of architecture" and with "light and elegant iron bridges crossing to the side-walks on the west side of Centre-street, and the east side of Chatham-street;" thence to "the Great Central Depot" in the rear of the Metropolitan Hotel, "which occupies three entire blocks bounded by Marion and Crosby streets, on the west, Mulberry-street on the east, Houston-street on the north, and Spring-street on the south:" its right aorta sweeping in grand curves eastwardly over Bleecker, Bond, Great Jones streets and the Bowery, just below Cooper Institute, and thence worming its colossal serpentine course over all the blocks between Second and Third avenues to the Harlem River, or to "its great upper depot, occupying two blocks between One Hundred and Twenty-fourth and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth streets, and thence over into Westchester County," its left aorta spanning Broadway near the Olympia Theatre and Museum of Anatomy, upon a triumphal "bridge of the Saracenic style of architecture, with stone parapets and mullions richly ornamented with carvings;" thence on (ditto) bridges westwardly over Mercer, Green, Wooster, South Fifth-avenue, Thompson, Sullivan, Macdougal, Downing, Carmine and Bleecker streets, swinging round a circle northwardly between Sixth and Seventh avenues to Thirty-fourth-street; thence diagonally or diversely (according to cost) across blocks west of Broadway to a street among the Sixties; here striding the Boulevard upon another magnificent Saracen, skirting Ninth and Tenth avenues in graceful curves, overlooping Morningside Park, "recrossing Ninth-avenue at One Hundred and Twenty-seventh-street, and continuing on through the grounds on the east side of the Convent of the Sacred Heart to Kingsbridge."

From time to time the papers in the interest of this scheme have assured us that the road was "to be pushed with great vigor;" "two hundred skilful and well-informed engineers and surveyors are engaged in making a thorough survey, not only of the proposed route, but a block on either side of it;"

[illegible] the construction of that part of the line between City Hall and the great central depot [illegible]

"The Company is already so thoroughly complete in all its arrangements that the opening of subscription-books for its capital will be immediately followed by the commencement of its construction."

"A rich and influential Board of Directors and incorporators" were so anxious to secure the stock that books were only opened to the public "after a proper apportionment of a large amount to each," and were ordered "to be closed on the first of August." By the terms of its charter this Company receives as a first installment $5,000,000 of City bonds. How much more the latter time, Tammany, and legislative tools alone can tell.

Ignorance or doubt upon that point is, however, relieved somewhat by the interesting intelligence that "the seal of the Company is the largest in the country, the circular stamp being about two and a half inches in diameter, and the socket of the die so constructed that the die can be removed every evening and placed for security in the Company's safe." In addition to this we are told that "throughout the route as at present contemplated there will be no less than 340 street-crossings," all to be spanned with conspicuous bridges of the Saracenic (pronounced sorry-scene-ic) style, and that the companies of "8,185 houses along the whole line" will enjoy from their windows a beautiful prospect of the sorry scene in portion of this Viaduct Railway.

That there are some gentlemen in the Board of Directors whose character for intensity and worth entitles them to great public confidence, is unquestionably true. But a careful examination of the only official document which has been submitted to the people in reference to the construction of this railway shows unmistakably the Ring style of making up figures.

In July a report over the signature of Mr. HENRY HILTON, President, and which was announced as unanimously adopted by the Executive Committee, was extensively published in the City papers.

This report sets out in its commencement with the following assurance:

"The views presented are purposely made moderate, and it is believed they cannot be disputed. They are submitted to you as the result of our convictions, after carefully investigating the entire subject."

For the gigantic blunders or gross misrepresentations contained in this report some accountant must be responsible. It is charity to suppose that neither the President nor the Executive Committee examined the same before appending their signatures.

The first item for examination, which relates to the business to be done on the viaduct, we quote as follows:

"At present we have official information that there are being carried on the horse-railroads of this City over 120,000,000 passengers per annum, 10,000,000 of whom are carried upon the lines east of Broadway and Fifth-avenue, running north and south."

A reference to the State Engineer's annual report will show that may be found full, complete and perfect returns of all horse railroads in the State, save, one, under oath from some officer of the several Companies, exhibits the total number of passengers carried, or fares collected, on all the horse railroads of New-York City during the past five years as follows, viz.: For the year 1866, 93,327,000; 1867, 99,375,975; 1868, 104,918,000; 1869, 113,819,326; 1870, 114,101,858.

Upon the lines east of Broadway and Fifth-avenue, running north and south, there were for the year 1866, on Second-avenue, 4,265,189; on Third-avenue, 10,956,000; on Fourth-avenue, 7,196,861. Add to these one half of the passengers reported by the "Central Park, North and East River Railroad," commonly known as the Bull Head, 5,000,000, and one half of those carried by the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery Railroad, which, however, is not a north and south road, 5,000,000, gives a total of 31,417,050. For the year last the correspondent number is only 34,851,000, a slight discrepancy from the seventy millions so exulted in the report.

Second Item.—Mr. HILTON says: "The transportation business of the horse railroads is increasing rapidly, year by year, the increase during the past year being over twenty per cent." This is King Arthur of percentages with a vengeance. The actual increase has been: For 1867, only seven and four-tenths per cent.; for 1868, only five and one-half per cent.; for 1869, only eight per cent.; and for 1870, the year referred to, less than one per cent.

Third Item.—Mr. HILTON says: "If New-York City was not to increase in population from this time the Viaduct Roads are finished, it is but reasonable to assert that such roads, if both tracks were now in operation, would receive 200,000 fares daily, and the railroads, steam-boats, horse-cars and stages would still retain 600,000 fares per day. * * * The reason of this may be found in the fact that very many persons who will use the Viaduct Road will also use the horse-cars and stages to carry them short distances to the Viaduct Railway Depot and elsewhere, and also in the fact that short travel increases with increased facilities." Here is twenty per cent. entirely unstripped; 91,250,000 fares on the Viaduct in a year, and the horse railroad companies not hurt a hair, and this marvel of all, it can be done without any increase in population of the City. The logic of the latter clause is mysterious. The Viaduct Road is to be over the cross-streets, its stations far away from the avenues, where crowds of short-transit passengers congregate, and with four or five stations per mile. What increased facilities for short travel will this railway on a Chinese wall afford?

Fourth Item.—Mr. HILTON estimates fares at thirteen cents for the Viaduct. If he will examine the reports of the metropolitan railways of London he will find that of the gross receipts for fares on dead roads seventy per cent. are derived from the third-class passengers at two cents per head, twenty per cent. from second class, and only ten per cent. from the first class. Will either the toiling millions of New-York or short-transit passengers patronize a road which increases fares from five cents to thirteen cents? And will not horse-railroads in competition, both increase their facilities and reduce their fares? Here is a blade which cuts both ways.

Fifth Item.—Mr. HILTON'S report, "making gross annual income $9,500,000. The expenses for maintenance, transportation, repairs, &c., of first-class roads doing a heavy passenger business are usually about fifty-five per cent. of gross receipts. This road will be much less, because," &c. * * * "But allowing for maintenance, &c., fifty per cent., $4,750,000, we have a net annual income from such line of viaducts of $4,750,000."

If anything was wanting to show the slipshod style of the "moderate views" and "indisputable figures" of this report, we need go no further.

This kind of arithmetic out-rings the Ring.

What engineer will say that expenses of first-class roads, doing a heavy passenger business, are usually only fifty-five per cent. of gross receipts? Can the Viaduct Road, costing $5,000,000 per mile, be maintained and operated for a less percentage of receipts than the best horse-car roads in New-York? Possibly, if managed with the same skill which is displayed in preparing this report. The total cost for roads, equipments and real estate of the eighty miles of double-track horse railways in the City of New-York is $15,488,797 81, estimating the cost of the Fourth-avenue and Madison lines at $1,000,000. Any first-class City road that does not return cent in cent in the State Engineer's Reports. These lines are constructed and operated under the Harlem Railroad charter, and separate cost is therefore not shown. The average cost of all these roads is about $193,700 per mile of double track. There is a wide difference between the cost of these roads, owing chiefly to amount and value of real estate embraced. The Sixth-avenue line has cost over $300,000 per mile; the Third-avenue over $600,000; while the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery returns less than $60,000, and the Broadway to Seventh-avenue line but $75,400 per mile. Now let us see how the real average of "expenses for maintenance, transportation, repairs," &c., compares with "gross receipts." Leaving out of the estimates small receipts from sales of old horses, manure, iron, &c., and equal to some incidental expenses, [illegible] for [illegible] and [illegible]

[illegible] Net income.....

These figures are all taken from [illegible] returns, except in the case of operating expenses on Fourth-avenue line, which, for reasons before stated, are estimated.

The Bleecker-street and Fulton Ferry, the Dry Dock, East Broadway and Battery, and the Eighth-avenue lines, return less receipts for 1870 than for 1869. How do these figures bear out the "moderate" "indisputable" and "reasonable" calculations of the Viaduct report?

Sixth Item.—Mr. HILTON'S estimate of annual receipts for "freights on the eastern branch of the New-York (Viaduct) Railway, $2,500,000," is simply absurd. Bear in mind that all freights must be both raised and lowered from 40 to twenty or more feet to obtain transportation on the road, and a more correct idea of the probable business may be obtained. Added with the passenger transit transferred to the Chinese or Saracenic wall, will the directors deny even the competition of the immense capital invested in surface roads, where freight will always necessarily be low?

Seventh Item.—Mr. HILTON says that his "estimates are very moderate, as one line of horse-cars alone is now carrying annually over 20,000,000 passengers." The Third-avenue, which estimates more than double the number to say nothing of the Fourth-avenue, has never reached that sum by f

WESTERN LANDS AND LAND GRANTS.

RAILROADS.

We desire to invite the attention of careful and conservative investors to a few facts of vital importance to them in making their investments. The General Government has long since ceased to be a borrower of money, such as the country has been paying and unable to borrow. Recently the Secretary of the Treasury, in addition to the regular monthly purchase of Government obligations, called in $100,000,000 of 5-20 Bonds. Under these circumstances capitalists have been compelled to look elsewhere for a profitable investment for their capital, and the first mortgage bonds of American railways are now the favorite security. The purchases of bonds by the Treasury have advanced the price of Government bonds to a point where they pay a comparatively low rate of interest. The greatest success in American railways can be found in the history of those roads known as Trunk Lines, which combine the benefit of through and local traffic. This great interchange of the leading trunk lines of railroads in this country form a striking illustration of the above fact, as will appear in the following statement of their earnings for 1870:

New-York Central	$22,398,824
Erie	16,779,466
Pennsylvania Central	17,151,787
Baltimore and Ohio	9,371,627
Lake Shore	12,497,589
Ohio and Mississippi	8,128,187
Toledo and Wabash	4,242,000
Hannibal and St. Joseph	4,246,324
Union Pacific	7,365,879
Central Pacific	7,158,729
Total for one year	$109,352,440

The St. Joseph and Denver City Road is already completed from St. Joseph to Maryville, from thence by way of Hiawatha into Nebraska, and is being rapidly completed to Fort Kearney, on the Union Pacific Road. The St. Joseph and Denver City Road will shorten the distance between the Atlantic and the Pacific coast from 50 to 100 miles, according to the different routes named above. The vast mining wealth of Colorado and New Mexico, the great agricultural resources of Nebraska, and the through and local traffic, thus combined, will make the earnings of this road equal to the best paying railroads in the country.

In this connection we call attention to the fact that the Land Grant of the Illinois Central Railroad Company is worth over $40,000,000 at the present price of the lands of the Illinois Central Company. The lands cannot be sold for less than $5 per acre, and the proceeds of the same are applied to the sinking fund for the extinguishment of the bonded debt of the Company. This loan was originally for $2,595,000, but has been largely reduced by sales to investors, including many shrewd Yankees and others who know and appreciate bonds which combine liberal interest with great security.

The bonds so far offered at 97½ and accrued interest, and we have no hesitancy in recommending them as an investment securely secured, both as to interest and principal. Parties desiring to participate in the division of the remaining balance of the loan are requested to make early application, in view of the possibility of an advance in the price of the bonds. The bonds of the Eastern Division of the St. Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, now being marketed by our firm at 95, may are now carrying in the market at 102. We continue to deal in these bonds the same as Government bonds and other securities. Investors will find this a good opportunity to convert their Government and other high-priced bonds, with the advantage of a higher rate of interest and perfect security. Maps, pamphlets, and full information in regard to the Company can be had on application.

Mayor Hall's Relatives and Tweed's Many Friends.

Searching for Ingersoll, Garvey and Keyser.

Donnarumma's Story of His Relations with the Ring.

A further analysis of the pay-rolls is given today, and will be continued to-morrow. It will be seen that two of Mayor HALL'S relatives hold sinecures through his influence. The king of sinecure-holders is undoubtedly CORNELIUS CORSON, who draws $10,000 a year as Clerk to the Commissioners for the building of the Ninth District Court-house, $5,000 a year as Chief of the Bureau of Elections, $3,500 a year as Clerk to the Board of County Canvassers, $5,000 for preparing the proceedings of the Board of Supervisors, $3,500 as official reporter to the Board of Aldermen, (he lately resigned this place to a friend,) and $3,000 as stenographer to one of the Courts, besides receiving various amounts from the Supervisors for copying services. All of his positions are sinecures.

It is a very nice thing to have a Mayor of a great City for a nephew, and to be enabled to get a sinecure public office through his influence. Such is the case of Mr. THOMAS WHITLEY HALL, whose official title is "Messenger to the President of the Board of Supervisors," which is another name for A. OAKEY HALL. The relationship between the former and the latter functionary costs the tax-payers $1,200 a year. Of course, it is almost needless to state that the Supervisors meet at frequent intervals, say about twelve times a year, and that Mr. T. W. HALL'S duties are so onerous that he finds it difficult to spare the time to draw his salary.

There is another gentleman of the name of HALL, who figures on the roll of sinecures. His full name is EDWARD J. HALL, and he enjoys the honor of being the nephew of the Mayor. The reader will doubtless be glad to know that he represents it as "Fifth Marshal" at the Mayor's office, for which he receives $2,000 a year. It would be a very different climate for the nephew of a Mayor to perform the work of a common Marshal, in behalf sufficient for Mr. HALL to bear the reason as at present the handsome salary of the office. Before taking leave of this Mr. HALL, it may be interesting to mention that he has threatened dire vengeance against the TIMES as said it should print his name.

Visitors to the Mayor's office may have observed a gentleman of well-dressed and well-fed appearance, with a costly gold watch on his vest, sitting at a fine black-walnut desk in one of the inner rooms. This gentleman is rewarded with a salary of $1,000 a year for acting as one of the clerks of A. OAKEY HALL. He is known around the City Hall as "TIM" GOLDEN, and his principal occupation consists of reading the newspapers, and responding to inquiries after "the Honor." When the Mayor wants any personal matter attended to, his interest is to "TIM," who hardly ever leaves his side, except when he is sent on an errand. At the election last year "TIM" was registered from the Mayor's private residence, and when the fact was made known, Mr. HALL said he was only there to watch the house. Probably this is the duty for which he receives pay out of the City Treasury.

In yesterday's list in the TIMES appeared the names of several prize-fighters. Among those to whom no solution was made was that of TIMOTHY DONOVAN, of the Nineteenth Ward, whose friends give him the credit of having once been a first-rate pugilist. Mr. DONOVAN holds the position of Deputy Clerk of Fulton Market, and contents himself with drawing $1,000 a year. He is never seen at work. It is said of him that one of his pastimes consisted of biting off one of the ears of the late Alderman, THOMAS COMBES, who is credited on the pay-rolls with $1,500 a year, although he has been in the grave for many months. This gentle act took place during the FERNANDO WOOD troubles in this City. When any one noticed Alderman COMBES mutilated ear, he used to remark, "TIM DONOVAN did that." Mr. DONOVAN went to Saratoga last Summer, and boasts, it is said, that while there, he was mistaken by the Police for a three-card monte player. He has accumulated $30,000 or $40,000 through politics, and by dispensing spirituous beverages in the Nineteenth Ward.

A cemetery is regarded as the most fitting place to preserve the memory of the dead who are not distinguished in life by unusual acts, but the Ring seems to have discovered a better way of keeping alive the names of those who have once served it. They help to add to the emoluments which are derived from the Treasury, and are, therefore, allowed a place on the pay-rolls. Yesterday we showed that the name of THOMAS COMBES, formerly an Alderman, was down on the sinecure list for $1,500 a year, in TWEED'S Department, despite the fact that he had been dead for nearly a year. To this must be added the names of several other dead men which have since been discovered. There is M. E. FLANAGAN, Sewer Permit Clerk under TWEED, who has been dead for the past six months. Can any one tell who has been pocketing the $2,000 a year which he is credited with getting? Notwithstanding THOMAS PRENDER'S funeral took place some time ago, the Ring does not appear to have heard of it, and draw $100 a month for him for removing garbage from the Washington Market. WM. RUMMEY, a minstrel performer, whose death happened long ago, is still kept by TWEED playing the part of a water policeman at $100 a month. JAMES CARTY, who formerly kept a liquor-store at the corner of Marion and Prince streets, and was also connected with the Sheriff's Office, is down for $100 a month as Deputy Collector of City Revenue. He has been dead for several months. Other names of dead men will no doubt be found in the list, after sufficient time has elapsed for a careful investigation of it.

It is long been suspected that the Ring had some men in its employ who was delegated to go around among the Tammany men collecting money for election and other party expenses. It now seems that this man is Mr. JOHN D. NEWMAN, of the Twenty-first Ward, who is down on the pay-roll as an attendant at the Court of General Sessions, for which he draws $1,200 a year. This is a sinecure berth in the strictest sense of the word. It is probable that he receives extra compensation from some other source for "striking" politicians for the Ring.

A very fat sinecure is held by TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL, a member of the Assembly. Two years ago CAMPBELL, who became noted at the time for appearing on the floor with a fast female, was enabled to get a bill passed creating the position of Mechanics' Lien Clerk in the County Clerk's office, in this City. There is no occasion for such a position, and it was only made to give Mr. CAMPBELL an opportunity of taking $5,000 a year from the Treasury. His whole work consists of drawing his pay, his face never being seen inside of the County Clerk's office except when he wants to see LOEW on some personal matter.

SAMUEL STRAUSS draws $1,000 a year as temporary clerk in the County Clerk's office. He spends his time at the Cosmy Club, in the Bowery, near Bayard-street. He is now under indictment in the United States Circuit Court for permitting fraudulent counting last Fall.

JAMES M. SWEENEY, brother of PETER B., gets $400 a month as Clerk of the Superior Court, besides acting as Deputy Chamberlain, &c.

THOMAS F. GILROY draws $3,000 a year as Clerk of Part III. of the Supreme Court, and JAMES L. CROSBY gets $2,500 a year as stenographer in the same Court. The Court was organized three years ago, but hardly ever sits.

DENNIS BURNS, believed to be the Assembly-man, is Docket Clerk in the County Clerk's office, at $100 a month. What the duties of a "docket clerk" are nobody can tell.

MICHAEL J. SHANDLEY, brother of the Police Justice, member of the Oriental Club, and a friend of TWEED, holds two places, one as Clerk in the Jefferson Market Police Court, for which he gets several thousand dollars, and the other as Clerk to the Board of Police Justices, for which he draws $250 a month. The latter place is a perfect sinecure. J. SOLIS RITTERBAND gets $6,000 a year as Counsel to the Commissioners of Taxes, and has to divide with the others.

PHILIP H. JONAS, Jr., is a son-in-law of GEO. H. E. LYNCH, and is hence a brother-in-law of Senator GREEN. He gets $2,000 a year as Clerk of the Ninth District Court-house. He never does any work for the City, but is engaged as a clerk in a silk warehouse.

MARTIN REMER, who gets $125 a month as Messenger to the Collector of City Revenue, is also clerk in the Surrogate's Office.

The most casual scrutiny of the pay-rolls will convince any one that the Department of Public Works is rotten to the very core. The gentlemen, eighty-seven in number, who draw their salaries monthly as assistant clerks to the Commissioners, are in very few cases fairly represented by the names signed on the pay-roll. They are in too many instances men whose services would have become valueless had they been openly repaid, being members of the Press, members of the Republican Party in responsible positions, and persons connected with the Judiciary. Occasionally, however, men were found who despised such masks and drew their pay in their own names. Among these is MICHAEL KELLY, who, within a few weeks, was City editor of the Herald. When that paper decided at length to throw over Tammany, Mr. KELLY resigned his position by request. From the Department of Public Works he drew $1,200 per annum for services which had no existence, and it is believed that he also has a sinecure in the Fire Department.

JUSTIN KOCH is another assistant clerk of the Commissioners. His name occurs twice at $600 per annum. This is not a clerical error, but a piece of utter bravado. This man is a nephew of the Justice of the Fifth District Civil Court.

JEREMIAH FROST is Superintendent of Markets, and gets $6,000 a year. He is never to be seen outside of Washington Market, where everybody supposes him to be Clerk of the Market, and where he blackmails the outsiders with a vengeance. He is partner with his brother, who has two of the best stalls in Washington Market.

THOMAS STARR, Clerk of Jefferson Market, gets $2,000 per year. He used to keep the Powter Mug, and is believed to have an interest in it still. He is a very old man, and a veteran politician.

GEORGE ODELL receives $2,000 per annum as Second Clerk to Superintendent of Street Improvements. He keeps a large livery-stable on Lexington-avenue; is well known to all politicians who keep their fast teams at his place, and was formerly an Assistant Alderman. He has been used on several occasions for swindling transactions in horse sales, which have been fully reported in the daily papers.

JOHN J. DIMOND is Clerk to Superintendent of Streets, and receives $2,000 per annum. He is also an Assistant Alderman. He is a member of the American Club, and in Mr. TWEED'S fullest confidence.

PETER BANTA, who is down among the Water Police, and receives a stipend of $1,600 a year, is probably a connection of Mr. BANTA of Tenth-street, a Jewish lawyer who assists Mr. TWEED in real estate matters.

FRANK DUFFY, the Assistant Inspector of Incumbrances, who receives $600 a year, is a retired pugilist who keeps a low restaurant on the Bowery, and occasionally gets up balls and picnics, which are a disgrace to the community. He is an ardent politician, and, having evinced some disposition to join the Morrissey-O'Brien phalanx of the Young Democracy, was considered of sufficient importance to be bought by this plum, since which time he has been a contented Tweedite.

EDWARD F. BRENNAN, who, for his nominal services as Assistant Engrossing Clerk, receives $1,500 per annum, is a son of OWEN BRENNAN, Commissioner of Charities and Correction.

CHAIS NATHAN, a relative of Judge CARDOZO, is first Clerk to the Corporation Attorney, and receives $3,000 per annum. This, however, is a mere bagatelle to what he gets as a reference lawyer. He has besides, some private practice, and has never at any time done duty as a Clerk to the Corporation Attorney.

PETER DUFFY, who is messenger in the Department of Public Works, gets $1,500 per year. He is believed to be either brother or cousin of the irrepressible FRANK.

MICKY FAT boasts that he has four sinecures. He may have, but he certainly has two rum-shops. He gets $1,000 a year as clerk of Fulton Market, but he never goes there, his favorite avocation being dog and cat fighting. He used to kill rats with his teeth in former years, but gave up the practice when he became an Assistant Alderman.

ANDREW BERKMIRE, Jr., is Clerk of the Third District Civil Court, with a salary of $3,000. He does no work, but spends most of his time at the American and Blossom, of which Clubs he is an ornament. He is the son of that low creature ANDREW BERKMIRE, Sr., a Tammany Republican and a low tool of TWEED'S, who recently was a delegate to the Convention at Syracuse. The son takes but little part in politics, but the father is completely under the orders of the Boss, and professes the warmest personal friendship for him and the greatest admiration for his administrative abilities. This young BERKMIRE was concerned in the Tweed stable business.

GEO. B. VAN BRUNT is another American man. He is Justice's Clerk of the Fourth District Police Court, and receives $6,000 per annum. He does not do any work for it, being one of the ornamental men of Tammany.

THOS. GANARY receives $1,200 a year for removing garbage from Fulton market. How faithfully he does his work the entire community will attest. He is the partner of MIKE NORTON in his stable in Mercer-street, and it is doubtful if he ever went near the market once since he received the appointment.

STEPHEN HAYES, stenographer to the Marine Court, gets $3,500 per annum for his services. He is on the staff of the Herald, and having served TAMMANY in some way was rewarded with this position, which was made for him. He pays another man $1,000 a year to do the work, and never comes near the place.

S. O. CLAPP is clerk in the Department of Buildings, and gets $1,750 per year. He is Secretary of the Unique Club, a small political up-town association, which has been represented to Mr. TWEED as very numerous and important. He is connected with some gas-fitting and plumbing establishment, and to this he devotes all his energies. The Department of Buildings never sees his face, and he has always pretended that he received nothing from Tammany. But his name is on the pay-roll, and he has drawn his money regularly.

The statement made in yesterday's TIMES, that Mr. PETER MARRON held a sinecure, is incorrect. He has now worked for the City in five years, or received any money from it.

Preparing for the Arrest of Mr. Tweed.

The Committee of Seventy yesterday appointed Mr. WILLIAM FLEMEN and WM. C. BARRETT, Esq., a committee to escort master workmen through the different Departments of the City and County, with a view of appraising the value of the work done in each and every Department. Messrs. EDWARD BAXTER & Co. examined the furniture and cabinet-work; another gentleman inspected the plastering and stucco-work; another the carpets and other articles said to have been furnished the City and County, and for which such enormous bills have been paid, all of which Mr. TWEED indorsed. The ultimate object in view is to obtain affidavits criminating Mr. TWEED, when his arrest will immediately follow.

THE RING MECHANICS.

A Search for Ingersoll, Garvey, Keyser, Miller, Keller and J. W. Smith—Only One of Them Found.

A TIMES reporter was yesterday sent out to find, if possible, some of the men whose accounts with the City Government have astonished our citizens. At Mr. KEYSER'S warehouse, No. 211 Water-street, the reporter called, and was informed that Mr. KEYSER had not been there during the day, and was seldom to be found at that establishment.

After an unsuccessful visit to KEYSER'S Fourth-avenue store, the great plumber was finally found at his house on Second-avenue. The reporter was received by Mr. KEYSER in the dark hall of his residence.

"Have you received any legal summons to appear in Court on suits instituted against you, or have you been subpœned to give evidence in the case of the Mayor?" said the reporter.

"I have not," answered Mr. KEYSER.

"I have asked," said the reporter, "in order to be informed upon a point of which I was in ignorance. I suppose you are aware that you are likely to be served with such papers?"

KEYSER—Yes; I have seen it in the papers.

REPORTER—I suppose you will give evidence freely.

KEYSER—I suppose so. I will tell all I know.

REPORTER—Is there anything that you would care to let the public know about your connection with the Ring, or in your defense?

KEYSER—I have nothing to say except that I am sick, worried out, broken-hearted and hunted down.

Mr. CONRAD BOLLER, who is down in the accounts as C. D. BOLLER & Co., was next searched for, but after a visit to his several warehouses and workshop, he could not be found. At each of the establishments our reporter was informed that Mr. BOLLER had been there during the day, but not for a long time at either place. Inquiring at his house in Thompson-street, it was ascertained that there was great uncertainty as to Mr. BOLLER'S appearance there. Mr. MILLER, who drew $260,751 61 during June, 1870, from the City Treasury for carpenter-work, was not to be found either, though his employes stated that he had been to the shop that day.

SMITH, the great awning man, was not visible to the reporter during the day, although a diligent search was made for him. It was said at his diminutive shop in the basement, at No. 74 Bleecker-street, that he had been there in the afternoon, but did not stay long, which is not to be wondered at, as the little shop must be a dull place to the possessor of fast horses and so much wealth. He had not been seen by the barkeeper of the porter-house close by, where he is wont to spend many hours, and the reporter was informed by one of SMITH'S neighbors that he (SMITH) had been absent for two or three days, but he had seen him that day about 4 o'clock P. M. for a short time at his shop.

"J. W. WELSH, successor to ANDREW J. GARVEY, plasterer," is to be read on the sign in front of a small shop at No. 33 Third-avenue.

Mr. GARVEY, as the man said who was brought up out of the cellar by a jerk at a bell-pull that hangs in the room, has sold out his business to WALSH. Whether the secret of making large bills out of small ones was included in the purchase was not stated. Mr. GARVEY, the man said, did not do any work now, which information in no way surprised the person informed, who remembered the immense wealth of the lucky plasterer. "He has letters sent here," added the man, "and comes every day to get them."

"Has he been here to-day?" asked the reporter.

"He's been here three times to-day—once this afternoon; I can't tell you where you would find him," said the man again, in answer to another question, and the reporter left, giving up all further idea of finding Mr. GARVEY for the day. Of IRONSIDE, the great chair-maker, nothing could be learned, either as to his whereabouts or movements, although it is said he is still in the City.

Card from an Honest Stenographer.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

A paragraph in to-day's TIMES does me great injustice, which I am sure you will be glad to undo. It names me as Mr. TWEED'S "private stenographer," states that I "attend" him at Albany, and insinuates that instead of the sum which appears opposite my name on the pay-roll, I am really in receipt of $7,500 a year. The statements and the insinuation are totally erroneous. I am stenographer to the Department of Public Works, and Mr. TWEED personally, and my relations to him are in no sense private, but wholly official. I do not "attend" him at Albany. I did go to Albany last Winter, not for the purpose you state, but to perform my duties as Stenographer of the Senate—in office to which I had been elected some months before I ever spoke to Mr. TWEED. The total amount that I receive or have received from the City is exactly the sum for which my name appears opposite upon the pay-roll, $2,500 a year, a sum less than I am able to earn by my profession—so low, in fact, that but for ill-health and a desire for temporary exemption from night work, I would never have thought of accepting it.

ANDREW DEVINE.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Oct. 3, 1871.

WHO IS THE FORGER?

Another Bit of Ring Rascality—Mr. Donnarumma, Fresco Artist, Tells His Story.

In the long list of fraudulent bills published in the TIMES of July 20, and subsequently in the TIMES pamphlet, there appeared the following items: "Dec. 28, 1869, paid for alterations and repairs to County buildings and offices, check in name of FILLIPPO DONNARUMMA, indorsed PHILIP F. DUMMY, A. J. GARVEY, for work supposed to have been done May 20, 1868, $93,283, and Dec. 31, 1869, paid for alterations and repairs to same, check in name of FILLIPPO DONNARUMMA, indorsed PHILIP DUMMIE, A. J. GARVEY, work done May 20, 1868." The TIMES, in commenting upon these singular indorsements, said "that the confusion in the minds of HALL and CONNOLLY with regard to DONNARUMMA, or DUMMY, or DUMMIE, was of little consequence, seeing that checks were also indorsed by A. J. GARVEY, so that we may conclude the money found its way into the hands for which it was intended." This opinion was entirely correct, as will be demonstrated to the satisfaction of the reader of the following "round and unvarnished tale," albeit told by an artist in paints and fresco work.

A reporter of this paper waited upon Mr. FILLIPPO DONNARUMMA, at his residence on Third-avenue, yesterday, for the purpose of finding out whether these sums were ever paid to him, and further something about the strange indorsements. The inquiries were most satisfactorily answered. Mr. DONNARUMMA never received a dollar of the money. Imprimis, the gentleman is an honest, hard-working Italian on the shady side of forty, with a pleasant swarthy face strongly marked by his dark eyebrows, mustache and glossy black locks, which flow negligently over his coat-collar. He is simplicity itself, and his story was recited without the least degree of hesitation. The visitor was greeted courteously, and his questions were answered freely in words slightly marked by an Italian accent.

"Are you Mr. FILLIPPO DONNARUMMA," quoth the visitor?

"Yes, Sir, I am," he replied.

"I was sent from the TIMES office to ask if you had anything to say about certain little checks drawn in your name for upward of $60,000 by the City. May I ask if you know anything about them?"

"I no not know to what you refer."

"Perhaps then I had better begin our interview by asking you: Do you work for Mr. ANDREW J. GARVEY?"

"Yes, Sir."

"Are you a sub-contractor for him?"

"No, Sir. I never had a contract or sub-contract from him."

"May I ask what is your relation to him in a business way?"

"Certainly; I am his foreman, or overseer, or what you call it."

"Is that all?"

"That is all."

"How do you get paid?"

"I draw $100 a week from Mr. GARVEY, as his employe. Nothing more."

"Then you never take any jobs from him on contract?"

"I have said no already."

"How comes it, then, that you have drawn such large sums of money as appear in the TIMES list of July 20, against your name?"

"What large sums?"

Here the visitor showed Mr. DONNARUMMA a copy of the paper in question, and pointing out the entries above mentioned, watched the artist's face. Such a look of unmitigated wonder as overspread his features can hardly be described. He elevated his eyebrows, and after a pause, burst out laughing, and said:

"Well! well! That is good. Ha! ha! ha! very good."

"What's the matter," remarked the other?

"What's the matter?" repeated DONNARUMMA. "Why that money is made out in my name, but I never got any of it."

"Do you mean to say that you never got one or both of these checks, or even part of the money for which they were drawn?"

"I do, Sir. I never knew anything about these checks; never got a cent of money drawn on them, and certainly never was owed a part of it by the City."

"Did you never work for the City?"

"No; I never had any contract or work from the City at any time, and never presented a bill for a single dollar against the City."

"But you worked on the Public Buildings?"

"Certainly; but always in the employ of Mr. GARVEY who could, and often did, send me from Public Works to private houses where he had jobs going forward at the same time; I worked for wages for him, and never did any more than make up the journeymen's time on Friday nights, so that they might receive their wages on the following day."

"Then you never actually or legally were in the City's employ, nor had any claim against it?"

"Never, Sir! Never at all!"

But here Mr. DONNARUMMA bethought himself of a little matter which throws a new light upon the check transaction. It certainly is a new way to pay old debts. Mr. DONNARUMMA relates the transaction thus: "About the time indicated on the face of these checks I recollect that I had been doing a good deal of work in the armories and had upward of sixty men employed therein. Their wages had been a couple or three weeks in arrears, as Mr. GARVEY told me that he could not get any money and was unable to pay them. This was very bad, you know, because my men wanted their money, having families to support. But there seemed to be no help for them but to wait. At last, one afternoon, or it may have been in the forenoon, I don't exactly recollect just now, Mr. GARVEY came to me and said:

'DONNARUMMA, I want you to sign these documents,' (he held a paper in his hand when he spoke,) 'because without your signature I fear we shall not be able to get any money for the men.'

'Well, Sir,' said I, 'I don't know what I shall do this for. You know I have no contract with the City, and my name cannot be of any use.'

"'Oh! yes, it can,' said Mr. GARVEY. 'At any rate, the long and the short of it is that this paper, with which I am about to get the money, will be of no service unless your signature is attached to it. Therefore, if you don't comply, the men won't get their pay. It is a legal form of an assignment of the claims of the men who have done the work, which will authorize me to collect the cash to pay them.'

"Well," continued Mr. DONNARUMMA, "my men were begging for and wanted their wages, and I supposed that what the 'boss' said was all right, therefore I signed the paper, and he gave me $1 to complete the legal form, he said, and that night we were all paid."

"Well, then," said the TIMES man, "you have given your signature to be used for the collection of an exorbitant bill from the City?"

"No, Sir! No, that is not so. I have no knowledge of any amounts having been collected more than our wages. We certainly never received any more. If an improper use has been made of my signature, as these checks seem to show, it has been done without my knowledge, and is an outright forgery."

A STARTLING STORY.

How New-York is Governed—An Army of Repeaters Bound by Oaths to Secrecy—Sections in Every Ward in New-York, Brooklyn and Jersey City—Fifteen Thousand Ready Voters for Tammany.

Information has been received at this office of a secret organization, by means of which the Ring has been aided to maintain its power for evil in this City, and to roll up those large majorities which have of late years nullified the will of the people of the State. The organization referred to is a society of repeaters, who, like the freebooters of the Middle Ages who sold their military services to whichever side paid the most for them, sell themselves to any politician who is able and willing to pay them for their infamy in wielding the force of fraudulent ballots upon what should be the fair field of a political fight upon election day.

This organization, whose name has only been heretofore known to its members, is gotten up solely, as those who are asked to join it are informed, for the benefit of its members. The benefit derived is a pecuniary one, and the money is obtained by the supply of repeaters from its ranks to any political party who will pay the highest price. To such an alarming growth has this secret society attained that its conclaves are held in every Ward in this City, Brooklyn and Jersey City. It is estimated that in the aggregate the members of the society number in the three cities over 15,000 men, who are pledged by the most solemn oaths to keep its secrets. The initiation fee is fifty cents, a low figure, but as men are wanted, it is kept so to keep them from hesitating, as they might do were the entrance money fixed at a higher rate. The candidate for admission to the gang is led by a circuitous route to the meeting-room, and before entering is blindfolded. When he enters the room he is fully informed of the objects of the society, and is required to take a most binding oath to submit himself to the laws and rules of the society. If he objects after learning the nature of what is required of him, he is led out of the room as he came, in such a mysterious manner as not to be afterward aware where he has been or who were present at the place of meeting. No advertisement is made nor any publicity whatever given to the meetings, which are held the first and third Friday of every month. The time and place of meeting is only known to the members of the gang, and is only made known by them to such men as they have good reason to suppose will unite with them. The subdivisions of the organization are called sections, and the heads of each of the Ward sections meet once a month to take measures to strengthen the organization.

The President and chief of this repeating army is a well-read, shrewd, and unprincipled man, who disgraces the honest calling of a brick-mason, once a notorious chief of Twentieth Ward repeaters, and who, working in New-York, resides in Brooklyn. He was at one time on the Police force, either in 1863 or 1864, and is believed to be now holding a sinecure position under the Ring Government. His name is withheld for the present.

The men composing this society are principally of Irish birth, and have been and are now in the pay of the Tammany Ring, who did not hesitate to monopolize their services at the first overture. Their method of repeating is to take board in as many election districts as possible, and register and vote in each, which, with the excellent facilities afforded them by Tammany inspectors and pad rouges, who prevent careful challenging by the opposition, has never been found out.

Of the 15,000 voters 8,000 reside in Brooklyn, and 2,000 in Jersey City. This leaves only 7,000 of the number entitled, legally, to a single vote in New-York.

Give to each one of the 15,000 three votes, and the 15,000 is multiplied to 45,000. Deducting the 7,000 legal votes and we have 38,000 fraudulent votes, and the added 8,000 who reside in the two other cities swell the fraudulent vote to 46,000.

With this society, other gangs of repeaters, corrupted inspectors and false-counters, office and sinecure holders, cajoled followers and the riff-raff of the unthinking, what wonder that Tammany thieves should fold their arms, and, when honest citizens call them to account for their iniquities, quietly acknowledge their misdoings and ask them, "What are you going to do about it;" and when, as in the last election, the National Government places her sworn sentinels at the ballot-box, guaranteeing to secure the protection of her strong arm in their duties, the Tammany thieves, raise a yell of "bayonets at the polls." The sooner State and national detectives put themselves on the trail of the great repeating army, of which the above particulars are given, the sooner will the disgraceful organization that have ruled the City so long be wiped out of existence.

JUDGE BARNARD'S CHARGE.

Instructions to the Grand Jury of the Oyer and Terminer—Reform in Elections—Corruption in the City Government.

In the Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday, Judge BARNARD delivered his charge to the Grand Jury, impaneled by him on the day previous. It having been whispered around that he would probably refer in his charge to the corruption of the City Government, a more than usually large audience was present, among whom were several of the Tammany Sachems, and a number of the counsel acutely engaged in the prosecutions now pending between the citizens and the Ring. After disposing of several unimportant motions, the Judge charged the jury as follows:

It is made my duty by statute, gentlemen, at the opening of every Court of Oyer and Terminer at which a Grand Jury shall be summoned, to lay down to them certain rules for their guidance, and to call their attention to certain particular acts and statutes that have been made necessary by the requirements of law. In pursuance of that direction I will call your attention:

First—To the Usury law.

Second—To the taking of fees for given service by public officers for a greater amount than is allowed by law. I presume it is wholly unnecessary for me to call your attention more than as a matter of form to that section of the statute, because as I believe the invariable practice is to make a good deal more than the law allows, and in fact nearly all you can get.

Also, to the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Also, to the sale of fraudulent tickets of steamboats or other vessels, &c., baggage-smashing or emigrant-running. That crime, which was so very frequent a few years since, has been almost eradicated by the Court of Sessions. Recently, however, it has commenced again, whether by the recent increase of immigrants from Europe, or whether money has grown short and they had to resort to that, it has commenced again with very great furiousness, and I am happy to say that the Court of Sessions has dealt with those gentlemen in such a way that it holds out to the public the hope that that practice will no doubt be discontinued in a very short while; and if the assistance of the Court of Oyer and Terminer is needed, it is certainly ready with whatever it can do.

Also, to the sale of obscene books or advertisements. You will observe, gentlemen, if you read very many of the papers of this City, that that law is almost openly defied, and I do not need to call your attention to any particular paper or print. Indeed, it is not necessary for me at this particular time to ask you to look into this matter further than your duty as Grand Jurors dictates when the complaint is made to you by the District-Attorney.

Last, gentlemen, in the Election law, a law that, in my judgment, is of more importance in its proper enforcement in this State than nearly all the other laws put together. It is unnecessary to tell you that for many years past in this City, as, indeed, in every large city in this country, gangs of dissolute men, State Prison birds, and vagabonds of every character and degree have banded together either for purposes of malfeasance in money, to vote very frequently on election day whenever and wherever they can get a chance, and by their vote or votes very frequently one man is enabled to neutralize the effect of a whole respectable neighborhood. Where gentlemen vote once and are willing to vote once, these notorious vagabonds will vote fifty or sixty times, and it is for the purpose of putting that down and to give an opportunity in this City for a fair election that I have determined to keep this Court of Oyer and Terminer open until after the election, and to keep the Grand Jury in session, although not compelled to come here, and not only on the day of election, but the day after, to issue warrants as a Police Magistrate, to see if by their incarceration in State Prison these frauds cannot be prevented. The time has arrived in this City when these things must be put down, or republican government must fail. I think that the majority of the dominant party in this City is large, very large. I think also that there may be a majority in this State. With that, however, I have nothing to do. If the party in power at the present has an honest majority, as expressed at the ballot-box, they want to enjoy the fruits and the benefits of it. If in the minority, they must give way to the expression of the people's will, and wait until such time as the people place them in office. All they hope for, or are going to demand, and all they will get from this Court, is that there shall be a proper election. This law, in its stringency, was passed a very short time ago, and I think during the history of the administration of criminal justice in this State there has only been one conviction for illegal voting where the offender was sentenced to the State Prison, and that was at the last term of the Court, when I had the pleasure to send him there—and a conviction of that crime on the part of any one will not be treated with a fine nor pardoned, palliated nor forgiven, nor with a light penalty or short residence in the Penitentiary, but with a long residence in the State Prison. My attention was called this morning, gentlemen, to an extract from a paper published beyond the confines of this State, calling attention to the administration of criminal justice in New-York. Ordinarily, it is not the duty nor in the power or province of the Court to pay any attention to attacks that may be made upon the administration of justice by any of its officers, when they are satisfied that it has no foundation. Now in this case, gentlemen, the administration of justice, so far as my experience goes, and an experience on the bench of fourteen years as Recorder and Judge of the Oyer and Terminer, I have never known, in this Court, a case of straw bail being taken in my life, and I know that I certainly have never let a criminal go who has been charged with any offense when the evidence would warrant his conviction, and from an examination of the proceedings in the Court of Sessions, as presided over by two Magistrates, who certainly have the confidence of the public in a very great degree, I am certain that justice is administered there. If the extract refers to some of the lower Courts, my attention has not been called to them. It is not my business to act as a Police officer, but in those cases that are brought before me.

There is another subject, gentlemen, at the present time which I shall call your attention to, although not strictly in the line of your or my duty, only as conservators of the peace, and that is the desire and necessity in the City of New-York at the present time for retrenchment in all the departments of the City Government. The taxes have increased, some of them legitimately, some of them probably illegitimately, very greatly in the last number of years. Not so greatly as public rumor may say that they are, because very many public government and benevolent works these have been started must be carried on at great expense. There may have been some irregularities committed in the City, or indiscretions—or possibly some harsher word might be used. Men are holding office in the City of New-York not appointed by any particular man, men in office who have been there for years and years, appointed by Republicans when in power or Democrats when in power, who never pretend to come near the City Hall except to get their pay on the 1st of the month, and some of them don't even live in the City. It is safe to say, and my attention justifies me in saying, that nearly all of these leeches and lost women in the City of New-York are supported out of the City Treasury, and for the purpose of stopping that I simply call your attention to it, so that some of these men holding sinecure offices may go to work and earn an honest living if they can, or else take the first chance at their more legitimate employment, the highway, so that we can send them to the gallows or State Prison. Your foreman has the power to administer your oaths. He will examine any of you who have a legitimate reason. You will administer the oaths to the witnesses and examine the persons who come before you without the attendance or assistance of anybody except the District-Attorney. He is your legal adviser, and entitled at all times to come before you, except when you take your vote on the finding of your indictment. You will not disclose the fact of your finding an indictment against any one, gentlemen, in a case of felony, except where he is in actual confinement. It takes not less than sixteen, nor more than twenty-three, to form a Grand Jury, and twelve must agree in finding or ignoring a bill. I would suggest to you, gentlemen, the necessity, for your own sakes, of not telling anybody how you vote on any particular question, whether the man was indicted or not. It can do no good. It is a mere piece of idle curiosity, and something which outsiders have nothing to do with. If indicted they will find it out sometime, and if not, their character is not injured. The Grand Jury then retired. The Grand Jury is composed as follows: William Hall, foreman; Robert Buck, Charles F. Burdell, John Buckley, Jr., Leander Buck, Henry M. Cheever, George W. Bull, Thomas Cottenet, Isaac Hendricks, Henry Everson, Jr., Edward Fanning, Charles Guidet, John W. Guentner, James E. Hedges, George T. Hawe, Robert Hall, James A. Hardenburgh, George G. Haslock, Charles Johnson, Peter H. Jackson, James Kearney, and Carle O'Connor.

Customs Treaty Between France and Germany Agreed Upon—Renewed Protest Against the Ill-Treatment of Germans Residents at Lyons—Arrest of Reported Agents in Paris.

VERSAILLES, Oct. 3.—It is semi-officially announced that the negotiators of the Customs Treaty on behalf of the French and German Governments have arrived at a definite understanding, and that the formal signing of the Treaty is delayed to await the payment by France of the indemnity money now due. It will be remembered that a fortnight since Baron VON ARNIM, the German Plenipotentiary at Versailles, made formal complaint to the French Government of the unfriendly treatment to which German citizens were subjected by the inhabitants of Lyons. As that time the French Minister of Foreign Affairs promised to investigate the affair, and render satisfaction for injuries committed and security against similar occurrences. It now appears that the French authorities have not acted with sufficient vigor to satisfy the injured Germans, and Herr VON ARNIM has addressed a renewed remonstrance to the Count DE REMUSAT, couched in very decided terms. He rehearses the grievances arising out of the conduct of the Lyonnaise, and concludes with the opinion that the half measures adopted in the case will prove very unsatisfactory to the Imperial Government at

THE COUNTY PAY-ROLLS.

Another Batch of Tammany Sinecures—The Courts—County Clerk's Office—Tax Commissioner's Office—Wholesale Array of Court Officers—More Not to Come.

We give below the pay-rolls of the County of New-York for the month of August, 1871. It will not require very close inspection to detect the frauds. Any number of them can be found under the head of the officers of the several Courts. The Superior Court has forty-three; the Supreme Court fifty-two; the Court of Common Pleas thirty-six; the General Sessions thirty-seven, which it designates as attendants; and the Marine Court thirty—in all nearly 200, the great majority of whom are Tammany retainers, and boast that the hardest work they are compelled to perform is the signing of the monthly pay-roll. Among those not on the regular County pay-rolls is the Register of Criminal Courts, who receives $1,500 per annum; the Translator of Courts of Record, $4,000 a year, and Mr. DOUGLAS TAYLOR, Commissioner of Jurors, $15,000 per annum. It must not be supposed that this long list of County employes is composed entirely of sinecures. There are a number in all the Departments, and particularly in the Controller's office, who are experienced clerks and accountants, and render the full value to the County and City for the wages paid them. In our report of yesterday the name of Mr. ANDREW DIXON appeared in an unfavorable light. The remarks there made were unjust, as may be seen by the card published elsewhere. In several of the bureaus, such as the Police and Fire Departments, requisitions are made by the Superintendents for the full amount of the pay-rolls, these being held as the only vouchers in the Finance Department for such payments. To-morrow we propose completing the list, with the amounts paid the employes of the Departments mentioned at the end of this article.

Here is about $14,000 a year paid to one person holding three different offices. The same person was once Clerk of the Superior Court of this City, but not favorably known as such, and he is the father-in-law of HENRY W. GENET, Ring Senator, and now candidate for re-election, which he is determined to secure at any cost.

HARLEM.

Not the Man Bedowned To.

In the list of those who hold office under the Finance Department of the City Government published in your paper this morning is the name of JAMES McCONNELL. Permit me to say that I am not the man. I never received, directly or indirectly, one cent from the City or County Government.

SINECURE OFFICE-HOLDERS.

Reducing the Number of Court Attendants—Cutting Off the Sinecures—A Salutary Movement.

The numerous political excrescences that have so long fattened undisturbed on the public Treasury—we mean the third and fourth-rate Ring politicians who have been classed on the sinecure pay-list as Court attendants—have been thrown into a great flutter for the past few days by the announcement that they were to be swept out of the easy offices which they had enjoyed, and were no longer to have the pleasure of drawing $1,200 each a year for doing nothing. Such a prospect is to their minds one of the greatest calamities that could befall them, and when they first heard the report they rushed to the City Hall almost to a man, to find out whether they were going to be "out" by the new Deputy Controller, as they termed their intended discharge. It was not difficult to distinguish them as they stood outside the Court-house in the Park, in crowds of four and five, discussing the fiat which had gone forth against them. They were readily recognized by their villainous faces and their loud style of dressing. Some few of them to be sure were present who did not wear the customary diamond pin, or the velvet coat, or the heavy watch-chain, or new beaver, but the absence of these peculiarities in the appearance of several of the "attendants" was readily accounted for by a knowing City Hall lounger, who said that they had but just returned to the City from fast watering-places, where they had spent all their money, and had been compelled to leave their valuables and finery with a certain class of accommodating individuals until they were able to make another "raise" on the City Treasury. This they expected soon to do, and to be placed in possession of plenty of funds for election expenses, but the proposed action of Mr. GREEN came like a cloud over their bright prospects, leaving them with their hands in their empty pockets, and depriving them of such indispensable articles to their existence as champagne, regalia Brittannicas, &c. When these indolent gentlemen, whose faces are more familiar around the Cuddy, Norton, Tweed, Shandley, Scott and other political club-houses than the Courts which they are credited to, and whose sustenance is sucked out of the earnings of the poor and the taxes of the rich, learned that their masters, the Ring, could not save them and that they had got to walk the plank, they became most bitter toward the men who had brought on the reform movement, and swore enough to have shocked a Billingsgate fish-wife. Their blasphemy could be distinctly heard by persons who passed near them in the City Park. As a whole there are probably no worse men to be found than Court attendants, although there are some few among them who are honest enough to discharge their duty conscientiously, and earn their pay. The most of them are creatures of the Ring, to whom they owe their appointment, through the Board of Supervisors, although a common but erroneous impression prevails that the Judges are responsible for them. It is but just to say that the latter have nothing whatever to do with their appointment or removal. Many of them, as can be proved, are nothing less than convicted felons, prize-fighters, gamblers and roughs, taken out of bar-rooms by the Ring because they could knock down an objectionable voter at the polls,

SCENERIES IN ENGLAND.

Summering in Wales—Among the Bathers—Customs, Characters—Leisure Hours—News from the Outer World—A Tourist's Experiences.

From a Special Correspondent.

ABERYSTWITH, Wales, Saturday, Sept. 16, 1871.

The ocean just hereabout is wondrously pacific. Day after day the same calm sea, tides rising and falling with scarcely a ripple. The morning bath is just delicious. The water is so clear that you can see the pebbly bottom, and just cool enough to be refreshing, with an entire absence of that stickiness or gumminess quality which makes the sea water in some localities disagreeable. So out we sally in the early morning, three of us—two home American ladies who have had some experience of salt water at Newport and Nantucket.

AMONG THE BATHERS.

Crossing the centre of the Marine parade, a broad crescent walk between the great curve of lodging-houses and hotels, and the beach, we come to a line of forty bathing machines—big boxes on wheels, which follow down the tide, hanging close to the water's edge, the latter wheels immersed. There is a door at each end. The fair bather steps in as one from the shore, closes it carefully, and after a short ceremony of changing costume, opens the seaward door, descends a short flight of stairs, robed in a dark blue dress, made like a night-gown, but so hideously ugly that if any male creature got a glimpse of it he instantly turns his eyes away with horror, never for a moment imagining that the beautiful being he loves about can be plunging about in the breakers in such a garment. When my lady bathers have arranged with the browned and hardy Welsh women who live on the beach, and some of whom, I suspect, not only keep a perpetual picnic on the pebbles, but sleep in the bathing-machines on a pile of these dreadful bathing dresses, I scarce (or the gentlemen's boxes, which are a good eighth of a mile away or another part of the beach, and are about one-third as numerous, for the women beat the men in the bathing line and some others, and take to the costume which is supposed to be sufficient for us Americans. "Please wear the drawers," said the tall man, who pushes down the machines as the tide falls. I try to comply with his modest request, but instead of drawers I find a very short, very thin cotton petticoat, or skirt, or frill, so short that I feel certain it would shock the sensitive soul of a ballet-dancer. I have seen something of the kind in picture-books, worn by African savages or South Sea Islanders; and I am expected to put on this brief and trifling affair, and walk out of my machine under all the front windows of the Queen's Hotel. As I always do what is expected of me, I put on my savage costume, march bravely out, take my header, and have my swim regardless of spectators. If they like it, I ought to be satisfied. And with the bathing I am eminently satisfied. The mountains look at Aberystwith, and Aberystwith looks on the sea, and I find them all delightful.

CURIOUS CHARACTERS.

When my bath is over, I walk along the beach to meet the teatime contingent, fresh and ruddy from the waves, and hungry for breakfast. Yesterday, waiting a few moments for the last touches of their toilets, the mistress of the baths did me the honor to salute me. She is a little brown, wrinkled Welsh woman, as spry as a squirrel, but bright black eyes keeping watch of every towel and every strapless. "Here," said she, "what do you wear them for?" alluding to my spectacles. "Because I am near-sighted." "Well, you ought not to be. Come down here and let me talk to you." So I went down on the warm sand, leaning on my elbow, my face within a yard of her deep wrinkles. And then she began: "Look at me," said she. "I need no glasses; I can see the finest cloth every thread of it, and I am eighty-four years old. Fifty years ago I was a great invalid; now I am never ill, and have not had a doctor these twenty years. And it is all along of a medicine that an old doctor gave me the recipe for; and it cured me, and a good many more that I have given it to; and if you will take it, it will give you your eyesight, and cure you of all ailments. You must get a pennyorth of camomile flowers, a happenny-orth of caraway seeds, two pennyorths of ginger root, a penny-orth of skirt, and sixpence worth of gin." Then full directions for the concoction of the remedies, adding the salts, and gin, with the doses, and then the way she went on about it, talking as if she had been practising for all her eighty-four years to see how fast and long she could talk, her eyes snapping with vivacity, and her deep wrinkles full of expression. I can hardly remember such a vivacious old woman, and if she does not take too much of her medicine, I should think she might take care of her bathing machinery for thirty years longer.

LEISURE HOURS.

Bath and breakfast over, we walk, we sit on the shingle, we hunt for pebbles—lovely crystals, wondrous moss-agates, delicate cornelians, and all the rest. A dozen lapidaries are waiting to cut and set them for us when we have found them. There are great banks of beautiful pebbles, acres in surface, and of unknown depths, or we explore the ruins of the castle. Portions of its round towers are still standing; but the walls, ten or twelve feet thick, seem to have been blown up with gunpowder, for they lie about in great masses, like the earthquake-riven rocks of the country. A portion of the moat and its outer wall are visible. Some of the casemates and wall-walks are arched, and the arrow-shaped loop-holes which sheltered the sharp-shooters. Nothing could be more perfect than such a castle before gunpowder and artillery. Well fed and water they could impregnable. If we want shade the cliffs afford it, for trees do not grow well by the sea. The cliffs are of slate, the strata pitched up at an angle of thirty degrees from the water, so that the rocks running with jagged points outward make it horrible to be thrown upon. But along the shore the watery storms have quarried out great caverns, and curious quiet nooks at the foot of high cliffs, which give us cool and pleasant shelter. There are scarcely any shells and very little marine life along the shore. On a rock worn smoother than most I found some small beasts which struck me as of most economical habits. They are like oysters or clams, only each one contents himself with half a shell, leaving the other half to his neighbor, the rock itself forming the side of his dwelling, and so, as they grow, visiting considerably closer than a brother, closer than any relations I know of—for I could not persuade one of them to let go his hold and permit me to inspect his interior arrangements. The rock looks as if covered with buttons—very flat oyster-shelly ones the size of a penny. After lunch the boats put out—a dozen or so nice sailboats put off to try for mackerel. Herring expected daily. They catch some soles, but broiled mackerel scent the whole place. Or you can drive off up the valleys of the two pretty rivers which empty here together and form the harbor—the Rheidol and the Ystwith. The latter river gives its name to the town "Aber," being Welsh for a confluence of waters. Thus you have a score of places in Wales, beginning with Aber—Abergavenny, Aberdare, Aberdovey, &c.; and in the hills around Aberystwith are the great lead mines of Wales. The export of lead ore from this port is about two million dollars a year. A vein of silver-lead ore at Bronfloyd is thirty-five feet wide, and yields ten tons of ore to the fathom deep. They have explored 810 feet from the surface. The glen and mountain scenery all about is much vaunted in the guide books. Sergt. TAYLOR thought the banks of the Dovey were finer than those of the Rhine. To my eye there is nothing so grand here as some of the lake and mountain scenery in Scotland, but it will do, and some of the valleys we came through on the way here were very charming. When I have been to the Devil's Bridge, where the Rheidol rushes down a deep ravine some five hundred feet, I will tell you whether it equals Niagara.

NEWS FROM ABROAD.

The Manchester and Birmingham newspapers are here in the afternoon—the London journals the next morning. People take a languid interest in news a day old. The great sham campaign does not trouble us. The English army is supposed to have been defeated, and was making an orderly retreat to Chobham Common to cover London. But the engineer officer had not got his orders, and no earthworks had been thrown up. Meantime the hardships of the campaign are dreadful. Twice have the handsome horses of the Guards stampeded; the son of a Duke has been seen trying to broil a rasher of bacon. At one canteen of the Guards there is no more champagne. London is doing its best to supply its brave defenders, but there is the usual complaint of lack of organization. It seems a big folly, but after the Franco-German war, and especially after the Battle of Dorking, it was necessary to do something to satisfy the country, so Mr. GLADSTONE and his military advisers have got up this sham campaign, lost a great battle, covered London, and expect to make a fine stand on Chobham Common.

POLITICAL TOPICS.

I did hear two men talking politics on the rail the other day in Wales, and both were pretty hard on Mr. GLADSTONE. "Do you know what Lord PALMERSTON said about him?" asked the. "He told a friend of mine, that Mr. GLADSTONE was a man of great ability and greater ambition, but afflicted with an irritability of temper that would ruin everything. He will be Prime Minister," said he, "long enough to ruin the country and then die in a lunatic asylum." PALMERSTON was a clever, plucky, tough old fellow, but this is the first time I ever heard of his setting up for a prophet. Politics must be limited everywhere in September, except in a few places where there are members of Parliament to be elected. Most people go off to the sea-side, forget Government, and take life as easy as they can. Much depends upon getting good lodgings. If an American company could be found to build a genuine American hotel in every English pleasure town, I think the people would adopt the new fashion. Now each town is made up of lodging-houses, each with as many lodgers as they can find and accommodate in little fusty rooms, with old-fashioned feather-beds, and such cooking as general lodging-house servants can be expected to accomplish.

A TOURIST'S EXPERIENCE.

I thought I had done something very nice here. I ran over, a week beforehand, looked up three lodgings, either of which would do, but I wanted to be sure. I did not take them, not being quite certain when I could come. When I did come, at 6 P. M., they were all taken, and I had to look further, with my luggage on the omnibus waiting. Finally, I found a place, strongly recommended—took it for a week in the dark, stayed one night, and spent the next day looking for another, into which I moved as soon, paying forfeit. As a sample, the mantel-shelf of a bedroom, which had been occupied by a series of lodgers, the last of whom had left that morning, was covered with a coating of dust which must have been months accumulating. I have no idea that brush or broom was ever used in the house. The filth was simply indescribable, and the good people seemed utterly unconscious of it all. Said the honest landlady: "I have to have enough of everything, and to have it clean." The place we came to is neatness itself; everything in order and everything shining, and the women who keep the two houses are Welsh. If I had found this place first, as a veracious tourist writing my first impressions, I should have said the Welsh housekeepers were models of order and cleanliness. It will not do to generalize. The English are the cleanest and the dirtiest people in the world, the most moral and the most immoral, the nicest and the nastiest, the best and the worst; and it must be that these are in all countries all sorts of people to make up the needed variety. No country is more admired by foreigners than America, and no country more disgusts them with certain habits and peculiarities. England is dreadful or delightful—just as you happen to look at it. In France you have always, as far as I have seen, two good things—good beds and good cookery. You can sleep well and eat well. In England, as a rule, both are bad. At one of the best hotels in Avery at with I had an indifferent bed and smoked milk and underdone sole for breakfast. In England the prices are nearly double those on the Continent. In Belgium supper, lodging and breakfast cost the same as good rooms in England. The cost of living as a good English hotel—not the most expensive either—is seven dollars a day, without wines or private sitting-room. A gentleman can generally live comfortably at such a hotel for less than ten dollars a day. He can live better on the Continent for from one-fourth to one-half the money. It follows that Englishmen either take lodgings at from five to ten dollars a week, and order their meals at cost, or they go abroad, get a change of manners, customs and language, as well as scene and air, and give foreigners the benefit of their expenditures. And that is the reason why there are as many absentees from England as from Ireland, and why I fancy you could do a good thing by establishing American hotels in England.

THE ENGLISH AT MEALS.

You think perhaps that the English will never take to the table d'hote at home as they do abroad. They will never run the risk at home of eating with their inferiors, even for the chance of meeting with their superiors. Perhaps not. I heard of some superior sort of people the other day who went to take seats for a concert. They looked at the plan of the hall, and inquired who had taken those next them. Mr. So and So, keeper of a very fashionable hotel, was the answer. Oh! that would not do at all—they could not think of sitting next to tradespeople, however respectable. Some other seats must be found. And they were at last. Would you believe that those fastidious persons had borrowed money of this same tradesman, and were sometimes glad to dine with him when they could come in at the back door. But fastidious and exclusive as they are, I see them here at Aberystwith dining and taking all their meals in ground-floor rooms on the marine parade, in full sight of the whole public, and as I walk along, I could almost reach the tables of twenty family parties, who, sitting before their open windows, might almost as well eat in the French and German fashion, out on the side walk. Abroad an Englishman will run the risk of sitting at table next a bagman—a commercial traveler—the lowest grade he is likely to meet. At home he is liable to meet persons of a lower order in a coffee-room, or on a steamer, and tries to be resigned to such calamities. But he can be exclusive, and dine in his own room in solitary dignity, if he chooses to pay for it.

WELSH BY-LAWS.

I find the by-laws of Aberystwith peculiar and rather inconvenient. I like to take a small boat and pair of sculls and pull off alone, or with company of my own choosing, for a quiet row or an idle drifting with the tide. Going down to the beach just now for a boat, I found that I must pay two shillings an hour and take a boatman. If I have a sail-boat I must have two men. "And if I hire a saddle-horse," said I, "must I carry a small boy behind me?" The boatman did not know. He had not read the by-laws relating to livery-stables, but it was as much as his license was worth to let me have a boat without a man to take care of it. It may be a good regulation, but I never heard of it before, and do not like it—no more do the boatmen, who are very much in favor of free trade and sailors' rights, and think the whole system of licenses and regulations is a conspiracy to pick their pockets.

THE WELSH CHARACTER.

There is a certain sturdiness about the Welsh character that, if not amiable, is highly respectable. They are several degrees more opinionated than the English, and less polite, if possible, in expressing and maintaining their opinions. A fault-finder might even call them quarrelsome. When the Welsh miners strike, they strike hard. Some years ago the people got tired of the annoying exactions of the turnpikes, and turned out and broke down all the gates. Even the shop-keepers, who ought to be civil to an expected customer, cannot always resist the temptation of a warm discussion. But, knowing each other's tempers, they make allowances, and keep up an armed neutrality, or quarrel good-naturedly. I found a sample of Welsh sturdiness in the church-yard here, on four grave-stones. One is sacred to the memory of "THOMAS JONES, Tailor of this Town," two bear the graves of the two successive wives of "THOMAS JONES, Tailor of this Town," and the fourth commemorates the virtues of a deceased daughter of "THOMAS JONES, Tailor of this Town." In both England and Wales the humblest callings are honestly, perhaps proudly, made monumental. If a man's descendants grow snobbish, and wish to forget the trades of their ancestors, their tombstones are ever ready to testify against them. At Oxford I read a long inscription on a gravestone recording the achievements of a famous ball-player. LILLYWHITE, the cricketer, has a florid epitaph on white marble in Highgate Cemetery. BENBOW, the rower, will have a pair of sculls on his tombstone, instead of one and the cross-bones. MONADNOCK.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

The General Convention to meet in Baltimore.

This General Ecclesiastical Council assembles in Baltimore Oct. 4. It is second to none in learning and dignity, including not only Bishops and clergy, but some of the most distinguished laymen in the country. In its organization it is similar to the General Government, having its two houses of legislation, that of the Bishops corresponding to the Senate, and that of the clerical and lay deputies corresponding to the House of Representatives. It remains to be seen whether they will be governed by the principles of common sense or by party faction and ecclesiasticism. There is common sense in law, in medicine and science generally, and this at times sets aside more theories and goes straight to the heart of a subject, in spite of rules and precedents, which are often the result of prejudice and bigotry, solves difficult questions, cuts Gordian knots of controversy, and brings order and harmony out of confusion and chaos. Now we believe that there is such a thing as common sense in theology and religion, and that the Episcopal Church needs this today as much, if not more, than at any time in her history. There is, in fact, danger of disruption in that body, yet which may be avoided by a little common sense. Not that we, by any means, ignore the Divine Presence and blessing, which should certainly be invoked with the greatest earnestness, yet God is not expected to work miracles to prevent error or disaster, if men do not use their own reason and judgment. Now one of the most difficult, if not the most difficult, question that will be brought before that body is one arising out of the case of Rev. Mr. CHERRY, of Chicago, with which most of your readers are familiar. That Mr. CHERRY is wrong in his position, few, I apprehend, either of the clergy or laity, doubt. No individual, certainly, in the Church, no more than in the State, should assume the responsibility of altering either constitution or laws. But, leaving Mr. CHERRY out of the question, the point now is, whether by an alternate phrase in the baptismal service relief will be granted to a large number who use the present form with serious doubts and misgivings. Some Bishops of the Church, some time since, united in a proposition or request that some alternate phrase be allowed, and this has been followed by a memorial to the Convention, signed by numbers of the clergy and laity. The alternation proposed is this: Instead of saying, "Seeing this child is regenerate, and grafted into the body of Christ's Church," it is asked that the word regenerate be omitted. And instead of saying in the prayer following, "We yield Thee hearty thanks, most merciful Father, that it hath pleased Thee to regenerate this infant by Thy Holy Spirit," it is proposed to say, "that it hath pleased Thee to receive this infant for Thine own child by adoption, and to incorporate him into Thy Holy Church." What is asked is not the omission of any part of the service, but simply that those whose consciences are troubled may be allowed to use this language. Now will so reasonable a request be granted? I am not one who has been troubled in conscience, for I believe this to be the meaning of the term regeneration here used. But I am well aware that some of my brethren, both of the clergy and laity, think the words as they now stand, necessarily imply an internal spiritual change, or change of nature, and hence the opus operatum. And so believing, they cannot in conscience use them—they cannot thank God for that which they do not believe to have taken place, and hence it would be simply mockery for them to use this prayer. Shall they be relieved? Why not? Does the alternate phrase yield any vital doctrine of the Church? Does it even deny baptismal regeneration? Not at all. For every intelligent churchman knows that there is a wide difference of opinion among those who use the language as it now stands as to its meaning. The Church has never given any authoritative definition as to the meaning of the word regeneration. Bishop HOBART held that it signified a change of state. Bishop HOPKINS, of Vermont, that it included the implantation of a spiritual germ. Bishop ONDERDONK, of Pennsylvania, held that there was both an outward and inward or ecclesiastical and moral regeneration, and this is essentially the same view as WATERLAND's. Others contend that the whole service is hypothetical, and that the Church prospectively pronounces that to have taken place which will take place, if the conditions of the baptismal covenant are complied with. We claim, therefore, that, by a change in the phraseology, the doctrine even of baptismal regeneration is not touched—that some who hold this doctrine believe no more than is involved in the alternate phrase. I might ask a half dozen of the clergy if they believed in baptismal regeneration, and all would answer, yes. Yet if I asked what they meant by that term, they would give very different definitions. Shall we then compel every clergyman to use a word so indefinite as this, and even at the risk of schism? But it is said that this is altering the prayer-book, and some lift up their hands in holy horror at the very mention of such a thing, as if altering the prayer-book were a deadly sin, and not a matter of religion. But while this can hardly be considered as altering the Prayer-book, suppose that it is what then? Is the Prayer-book inspired and infallible? Not at all. We do, indeed, venerate it; we consider it a wonderful book, and bless God continually that in these days of error and infidelity we have such an admirable "form of sound words." But this book was a growth. Again and again it has been altered and improved. Our American revisers have changed it materially. They had no such binding instruction in regard to it. They not only changed some words, but left out a whole creed and form of absolution. Now we do not believe in continually tinkering with the Prayer-book. We should have great fears that if any radical changes were made we might lose instead of gain.

But this is not a radical change, and those who suggest or propose it have no sympathy whatever with the radical spirit of such men as Messrs. THRALL and GALLAGHER. But there is certainly a golden mean between fanaticism and old fogyism, or between the advanced ritualism of St. Albans and the latitudinarianism which is ready to plunge headlong into infidelity. We are not obliged to choose between extremes, and while great caution is necessary, yet we do not believe that either wisdom or prudence died with the reviewers of this American Church in 1789, or that the same spirit which kept them from error will not now preside over the deliberations of our Synod. Some things in the Prayer-book are manifestly adapted to an other age, and need to be adapted to this. Our Bishops and deputies may sit in solemn council and declare, like the doctors of Salamanca, that the world does not move; but the world does move, nevertheless, and unless as a Church we are alive to the present time, to its wants, to the wants and necessities of the day in which we live, then we shall be left in the back-ground, left to see other ecclesiastical bodies catering in and possessing the land. Not that we should touch or compromise any vital truth, not that we should countenance fanaticism and error for a single moment. But that, as a Catholic Church, we should rise to the emergency of the case, and manifest that comprehensive spirit which embraces all who hold the Head, which welcomes all as laborers in its fold, who receive those doctrines that are necessary to salvation. Anything less than this is the mere sectarian spirit, and if narrower or more exclusive, virtually drives men from her fold, then she is guilty of schism, and not those whom she ejects. It has been often lamented that the Methodists were driven from the Church of England, or that they were not retained by a more liberal and charitable spirit. Let us have a care that we do not make a similar blunder. If the Methodists should now, as a body, offer to come to us, accept our ordination and our liturgy, if we would give them an alternate phrase in the baptismal service, would we be so stained, so demented, as to refuse them? If not, is it not equally important to give relief to many already in the communion, who feel strongly that this is the fold of what we regard as a pure branch of the Church of Christ? Who, indeed, are our brethren and companions in labor, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, so to speak. But setting aside all such considerations, all the bonds of a common faith and Christian brotherhood, is it not the dictate of common sense to grant the prayer of the petitioners and preserve the unity of the Church? But when we go beyond all this, and consider the peace of Zion, the cause of Christ, the spread of the gospel, the building up and extension of the Redeemer's kingdom on earth, all these interests, in short, which involve the conversion and salvation of our fellow-men, which are greatly injured, if not destroyed by dissension and discord, by bigotry and intolerance, how can there be any hesitation?

During the sitting of this General Council, day by day the presence of the Holy Spirit is invoked who presided in the councils of the blessed Apostles. But what mockery is this if the spirit of love and toleration that characterized these blessed Apostles does not prevail—that spirit which one of our collects says is the very bond of peace, and of all virtue, without which whosoever liveth is counted dead before God.

AN OLD-FASHIONED CHURCHMAN.

SENATOR SHERMAN.

Speech in Lancaster, Ohio—His Views on the Kuklux Bill, Amnesty and the Tariff.

Senator SHERMAN made an able speech at Lancaster, Ohio, on the afternoon of Sept. 30. He pointed out clearly how hopelessly divided the Democratic Party is, except on comparatively unimportant matters, and asserted that there is not a single question of public policy in which he could not answer one Democrat by quoting another. They unite, he said, only in demanding amnesty, so that rebels as DAVIS, TOOMBS, and STEPHENS, so that they may come back to the Senate and House of Representatives. This, and an unreasonable opposition to our laws for the protection of the ballot-box, and of the loyal people of the South, and the eager desire for office, is all that now holds the Democratic Party together.

He continued: "I can only say that I fear we have already been too generous to these rebels, but since we have gone so far toward amnesty, I have been, and am now, disposed to complete our generosity by making it so general that only those who are still open rebels and criminals shall be excluded from office. I am not in a hurry about it, and am not eager to see the leading spirits who led in the slaughter of our kindred back again in Congress to make laws for their widows and orphans. And when I vote for general amnesty it will be as an act of generosity and for public policy, and not that it is due to the men who are now disqualified for office."

Proceeding to a consideration of the Kuklux law, and particularly the section enjoining upon the President the duty of seeing that the laws are faithfully executed, when a State administration shall so request, Mr. SHERMAN said: "Now, in the present condition of the South it is far better for the peace of the whole country that this duty should be performed by the President rather than by the Governor. A call by the Governor for the State militia to suppress Kuklux Klans, composed, as they are, of organized bands of white rebels leagued against the blacks, would only be responded to by the blacks, and thus we would have a civil war of races, and the South would realize what they seem to be courting. This high power to preserve the public peace is far more safely lodged with the President, and the actual experiment shows the wisdom of the policy. A small company of United States soldiers were known able to prevent crime and arrest criminals, when the attempt by local militia would have led to civil war. The fourth section provides that when the rebellion in a district or county of a State had become so numerous and powerful as to defy both the authorities of the State and the United States, and the preservation of the public safety became impracticable, then such district or county might be declared by the President to be in a state of rebellion, and the privileges of the writ of habeas corpus might be suspended, but not longer than until the close of the next session of Congress. This section I confess I voted for with reluctance; not that there is any doubt of the clear constitutional power of Congress to pass it, and the President to enforce it, but that I believed a wiser remedy was to be found in an ancient law of England called the 'Statute of Winchester,' in force for six hundred years, and universally regarded by their lawyers and Judges as the great palladium of law and order. As a substitute for the military features of this act, I proposed a section containing in substance the same old act. It provided that when in any city or county any person was injured in his person or property by a mob of armed and disguised men, with a view to deprive him of rights conferred by the Constitution of the United States, and the local authorities would not and did not protect him, that he might sue the city or county in the Courts of the United States, and recover damages for the wrong done him. This in substance, is now the law in most of the New-England States, in New-York, Kentucky and Maryland. The principle is right and just, that when the community in which a man lives does not protect him from mob violence, the community ought to suffer, and not the citizen. This law would have enabled every man outraged by the Kuklux Klan to have sought his remedy from the county in which he lived, and which owed him protection, rather than to sue disguised outlaws who could not be identified, and were worthless when identified. Such a law could be enforced by the Courts in civil actions, without soldiers in arms. The lawyers would enforce it, for they would be sure of their proof and their fees, and every tax-payer, when required to pay his share of the damages, would find out about the Kuklux and be glad to put an end to their atrocities. This section, after full debate, was twice passed by the Senate; but, as usual when wise measures are defeated, it was by a combination of all the Democratic members and a few Republicans in the House. I am happy to say that the great majority of the Republican representatives gave it a hearty support, and I trust at the next session of Congress we may see it the law of the land.

"All these and other wrongs committed by Democrats against Republicans. Their motive was compounded of hate of the negro and the desire to deprive him of and deter him from enjoying rights conferred upon him by the Constitution of the United States. Do the Democratic leaders deny those atrocities? Hardly. No honorable man can do it without a sense of shame. But they tell us that the reconstructed Governments of the South are covered with fraud and peculation. Mr. GROESBECK says some rebels are excluded, and the negroes are ignorant. It is clearly proven that all the improvidence, waste and peculation in the new State Governments were participated in by both parties, but the Kuklux Klan does not aim its blows at thieves. They do not murder the men charged with peculation. They aim at poor negro preachers and school-teachers, almost always at those who are lifting the negro race from its ignorance. The men who participated in improvident schemes of expenditure are the very men who direct the movements of the Kuklux Klan, and set them like blood-hounds upon poor and unoffending negroes. The only part of Mr. GROESBECK's speech that I could not read with patience was his attempted palliation of the work of disguised barbarians, and his criticism of the law by which alone they are held in check. If he could be transferred from his peaceful and luxurious home to the scene of one of these midnight crimes, committed within sight of the Capitol, he would be ready enough to vote for the Kuklux law, or any other law that would check these atrocities. The most fearful feature of this organized crime in the South was the fact proven by lawyers, Judges and victims that no one had been punished for any crime committed by the Kuklux. We have crime enough here—everywhere—but society pursues it and punishes it; but this wholesale crime was protected in the Courts, it is the juries, and in the witness-stand by organized perjury. No man dare raise his hand against it. It was stronger than the law, and was backed by the whole power of the Democratic Party in the South, where alone the Democratic Party has an assured majority. The law is now checking these crimes. For one, I am free to say that if the Kuklux law does not put an end to the Kuklux Klan, I will do all that one man can to find a remedy, whatever may be the consequences. Civilized society cannot long survive such unpunished outrages. We must either put them down or civil war will ensue from the cries of suffering victims and burnt cabins, and then the South, already devastated by a political war, will suffer the worst pangs of retribution by a war of races."

From the concluding portion of the speech we take the following paragraph relating to the tariff:

"I assume then that the primary object of the tariff is to produce revenue, and I may add, that all parties, in all periods of our history, look to a tariff on imported goods as the best, the cheapest, the easiest collected, and least burdensome form of taxation for the support of the National Government. We may assume that at least $160,000,000 must in all events be raised by a tariff for the next session of Congress. If any one of the wants and necessities of the day in which we live, then we shall be left in the back-ground, left to see other ecclesiastical bodies catering in and possessing the land. Not that we should touch or compromise any vital truth, not that we should countenance fanaticism and error for a single moment. But that, as a Catholic Church, we should rise to the emergency of the case, and manifest that comprehensive spirit which embraces all who hold the Head, which welcomes all as laborers in its fold, who receive those doctrines that are necessary to salvation. Anything less than this is the mere sectarian spirit, and if narrower or more exclusive, virtually drives men from her fold, then she is guilty of schism, and not those whom she ejects. We may assume that at least $160,000,000 must in all events be raised by a tariff for the next session of Congress. In raising this sum, I shall favor the general principles so often studied by me, of maintaining the present high duties on articles of luxury, which now yield fifty-two millions in gold; average duties on articles of comfort which enter into competition with similar articles of domestic industry. To avoid the evils and uncertainties of ad valorem duties, as far as practicable, specific instead of ad valorem. And I would reduce, as rapidly as the public service will allow, the duties on articles of necessity, the products of tropical countries, which enter into the common consumption of the people. I would also add largely to the free list all the raw products of industry with a view to cheapen domestic fabrics without reducing the price of labor. I trust the time will never come when the laboring men of this country in the production of the great and indispensable staples of industry will be compelled to compete with the grinding poverty of European labor; and it is not right while they pay their part of the taxes on articles consumed by them, that they should not have the incidental protection of our Revenue System on the articles produced by them. Let us have a Tariff law fairly and justly based on these general principles, and the Tariff question will cease to be political. Our capitalists can know where they stand, and our laboring men may then pursue all reforms that tend to elevate them and educate them. In all such movements they will have the hearty aid of the Republican Party. Not only has the Republican Party met these financial questions with success, but it has met and solved innumerable difficulties as they arose. It established the homestead policy. It has settled in an honorable way our difficulties with England. It has, after two centuries of disuse, restored the Penn or Quaker policy with our Indian tribes. It is now solving civil service reform. There is no reform, progress or advance in politics, religion, temperance or law that it cannot discuss and decide better than any other party. When it moves, it moves with the step of a giant, and what it proposes to do, it does. The Democratic Party has at its heels about two years behind our rear stragglers. We are affirmative. Progressive, advancing. They are a pure party of opposition, without fixed principles, and with such barnacles as Kuklux and Tammany Hall hanging at their keels. Let us, then, as a party, and advance this great Republic to a position of unexampled prosperity and grandeur."

DETROIT.

The New City Hall—An Elegant Building.

DETROIT, Sunday, Oct. 1, 1871.

I find the people of Detroit highly elated at their new City Hall, just completed. They talk City Hall very much as we talk Central Park. I have taken occasion to go several times through the building from basement to turret. After this thorough inspection, I was furnished, through Mr. HENRY STARKEY, the City Clerk, with official abstracts of all the sums expended upon the structure itself, and for its entire fitting up and furnishing. From Mr. JAMES ANDERSON, the architect, who furnished the design, drew all the plans and specifications and superintended the work, I also received much information. The building is entirely finished. I understand that every bill has been audited and paid, and that the detailed statement, which I subjoin, includes every dollar of the entire cost. Taken in connection with the facts furnished by the TIMES respecting our New-York Court-house, it affords matter for profitable, if not altogether pleasant consideration.

The Detroit City Hall occupies a very favorable site in the centre of an open space known as the Campus Martius—about as large, I estimate, as Madison-square. This is bounded on each side by a broad street, while other broad streets converge into it, somewhat like the spokes of a wheel. Each side of the Hall is therefore a front, and all are treated in a somewhat similar manner, the opposite fronts being precisely alike. The building is in the Italian style, three stories high, besides Mansard roof and basement, with a tower in the centre. The height from street to cornice is 66 feet

DAILY, WEEKLY AND SEMI-WEEKLY.

This journal is now thoroughly identified with the greatest political necessity of the hour—uncompromising warfare against all forms of corruption, whether in national or local government. For years past the TIMES has been exposing the demoralizing schemes of self-interested politicians, and its recent services upon the Tammany Democrats has been received with universal approval. It has adhered to the pledge given in its original prospectus, more than twenty years ago, that the public should be fully represented, and their interests faithfully guarded through its columns. Its record has been pure and honorable, and the highest aim of its proprietors is to render it more and more worthy of its past history, and of the confidence which the public repose in it. Two out of three of the original proprietors still discuss its policy, and guide it on all public questions. They purpose that the TIMES shall continue to keep clear of all narrow and unworthy influences and cliques, and aim to represent the great body of the public, as distinguished from personal factions. It occupies a perfectly independent position, and is free to speak the truth on all subjects and about all men. Its greatly increased circulation throughout the country adds to its power and influence. It will continue to be a faithful exponent of Republican principles, and advocate with untiring energy every cause which tends to further the welfare of the people.

The utmost care will be devoted to gathering political news from special sources during the Presidential canvass. The department of the paper will be unusually full and trustworthy. Renewed energies will be exhibited in every department of the paper, and large space will be devoted to reports of speeches made during elections, or on other important political occasions.

A very full summary of news, and many general articles of great interest, are published in the Semi-weekly edition; and in the Weekly edition there is an unabridged report of the proceedings at the Farmers' Club, an excellent summary of political information, and a great variety of matter suitable for family reading.

The NEW-YORK TIMES is pre-eminently a family paper, all objectionable advertisements being rigidly excluded; and it has a constantly increasing circulation among the most respectable classes of the community.

Some people may hold that it is "too early" to begin talking about the elections—but we hope that Republicans everywhere will busy themselves in preparing for a victory. Let their voices be heard in vindication of the great principle of our Government—the right of the people to govern themselves, instead of being ruled by a long line of "Bosses." Whatever Democrats may say about the evils of corruption, under pressure of public opinion, the Republican Party can alone be depended on to support the good cause for which we have been fighting. We say to all Republicans, never mind local differences—set aside the "claims" of politicians, their feuds, and their "wrongs," and work energetically for the ticket agreed upon at Syracuse. If ever there was an excuse for Republicans staying away from the polls, there will be none next month. Complete your organizations—let every honest man work as if he had a personal interest in the contest. The other side is active, and by vigilance alone can we hope to win the day. It is never "too soon" to guard against defeat.

The Rochester Convention.

It is pretty well understood that the Democratic State Convention will treat the Tammany business purely from the stand-point of party interest. It is not easy for narrow-minded politicians to rise above the selfish motives that usually control them. The flock that has gathered at Rochester is evidently moved by the sympathies and impulses common to the species. They talk of "regularity," and of the fact that the Tammany delegation is the only one with a "recognised organization" behind it, and are afraid of the "precedent" it volunteer delegations are admitted. A holy horror has sprung up among them, too, over the bad repute of the "Young Democracy." "The general opinion prevails," adds one correspondent, "that the whole New-York organization should not suffer for the sins of a few men." It is evident that the Convention will do just as much as it thinks necessary to save the Democratic Party from ruin, and no more. The members as yet in attendance do not seem to understand that there is any great crime to be punished for the sake of justice, or any great criminals to be driven into obscurity for the good of an outraged community. They only see an awkward discovery, the consequences of which are to be avoided, and a batch of fellow-partisans whose reputations are under a cloud. The only problem presented, as far as appears, to the minds of these delegates is, how far these unfortunate victims of untimely exposures can be at once condemned to the public and saved to the party.

If any such feeling is to govern the action of the Convention, it is a matter of utter indifference what is said in the platform. The public will accept acts, but not words. If, for instance, the Convention, as our correspondent declares it will, denounce the frauds in strong terms, the people will say: "What earthly use is it to denounce frauds in a Convention including the representatives of the men, and even some of the very men themselves, guilty of the frauds?" If, as another correspondent prophesies, the Convention "calls on the District-Attorney to prosecute all those charged with fraud," the people will reply: A prosecution that ought to have been undertaken months ago, and waits for a mandate of a Convention, made up in part of the accused persons, amounts to nothing. It is a mere blind. It is like the Mayor's reported attempts at investigation that does not investigate, and will end in renewed disappointment and disgust.

There is only one way for the Democracy to go into this campaign with anything like a clean record, and that is to repudiate Tammany and all the men and measures of Tammany, and accept openly and at once the reform Democrats who present themselves in the place of the Tammany representatives. If it does this, the Democracy can then be treated as at least a decent party, entitled to a fair consideration of its professions and its promises. If it does anything less than this, "but in the estimation of a hair," it is lost.

Are We to be United?

The Tribune has declared its intention to give a hearty support to the ticket nominated by the State Convention, and thus renders it certain that the withdrawal from that body of one of the contesting delegations will have no effect upon the vote in the State at large. It may have some effect upon local nominations, and yet the condition of affairs is such in this City that we apprehend that in any event the influence will be very small.

The Tribune does not distinctly say whether it proposes to stand by its friends in "bolting" the Convention, and endeavoring to keep alive rival Republican organizations, to which its favorite phrase of "regular" can certainly no longer apply. We presume it will do nothing of the sort, and if it does not there is an end to Republican divisions in this City, so far as the organization is concerned. Indeed, it is obvious that Mr. GREELEY cannot in honor sanction any attempt to keep alive the Twenty-second-street Committee and its subordinate organizations. On Aug. 2, 1871, the Committee over which Mr. GREELEY has presided met, and passed the following resolution, introduced by him:

"Resolved, That confiding in the justice and discernment of our Republican brethren throughout the State, and determined that the party shall not be distracted, if it be in our power to prevent it, we place ourselves unreservedly in their hands and will abide by the judgment of our said State Convention, whatever that judgment may be."

Mr. GREELEY, in the remarks with which he accompanied the introduction of this resolution, said: "It seems to be necessary that we should say that while we could not admit the power of the State Committee to disorganize the party, we are ready to go to a State Convention and abide by its decision." And in the Tribune of Aug. 7 he said:

"The editor of the Tribune accepted the Chairmanship of the Union Republican General Committee with a single and avowed object to do his utmost to heal the feud which distracted and weakened the Republicans of this City. To that end he has steadily labored, and he had strong hopes of effecting it at an early day, hopes which the abrupt removal from office of Hon. MOSES H. GRINNELL and Gen. GEORGE W. PALMER for a time baffled and threatened to blast altogether. At length he has been gratified by a hearty, unanimous agreement of the Committee whereof he is Chairman to submit the matters in difference to our next Republican State Convention, and implicitly abide its judgment. He will not doubt the readiness of the rival Committee to concur, and thus give assurance that all differences will cease, that Convention shall adjourn and a Republican triumph this Fall be thereby assured."

The State Committee disbanded and dissolved the General Committee over which Mr. GREELEY has presided, and the district organizations subordinate to it, and declared that they should no longer be regarded as representing the Republican Party. That action the State Convention has now deliberately approved. Mr. GREELEY will therefore no longer lend the support of his name or presence to the Committee over which he has presided. Were is not for the action of the delegates who bolted after they left the Convention, and the open threats of prominent men among them, we should be sure that no attempt would be made in any quarter to repudiate the decision of the tribunal to which all parties referred the matter.

Apart from the fact that where the representatives of an organization unanimously pledge it to abide by the decision of a selected tribunal, every member of that organization would seem in common honesty to be bound by the decision, we find that of the fifty-six delegates to Syracuse no less than thirty-seven were members of the General Committee, which on Aug. 3 unanimously resolved to abide by the decision of the State Convention, while eight more of the delegates are Presidents of the associations subordinate to it. And yet these men, after such a pledge, not only hold an indignation meeting, but appointed a committee with authority to call a State Convention, and some of them privately declare their purpose to keep up their local organization. We are accustomed to look for honor and honesty to such men as SINCLAIR TOUSEY, HORATIO N. TWOMBLEY, LLOYD ASPINWALL, JOSEPH W. HOWE, GEORGE P. BRADFORD and others, and we are unwilling to believe that they at least profess to lend the sanction of their names to a course of action on the part of their political associates which involves a direct repudiation of both. They have, however, been so gravely compromised by the hasty action of themselves and their companions that they owe it to their reputations to make a public statement of their intentions.

We trust and believe that the Republican organization, which the State Convention has now declared to be the only one in the City, will at once throw its doors wide open. Let it hasten to receive as members every Republican who desires to be enrolled as such, without regard to past affiliations or enmities, and let it make such persons feel that the decision at Syracuse is not a victory of one enemy over another, but is the award of an arbiter to whom life-long friends have appealed to settle differences which have arisen among them.

Official Irresponsibility.

The recent course of events in regard to the Municipal affairs of this City has brought to light, or rather has concentrated light upon, a serious defect in our polity. We lack the means of ridding ourselves, quickly of men who, holding by election high offices of public trust, are notoriously corrupt; we have no speedy and effective way of making such men feel their responsibility directly to the people; and we are equally lacking in any process, except it be very protracted and circuitous, by which we can compel an official thief and his confederates to restore the public money which they have misappropriated to their own uses, or that of their faction or party. For years it has been the common talk that this City was in the hands of political scoundrels, who used their official positions to line their own pockets and those of their faction, and to keep their places by the very corruption which made those places desirable; and yet, what a long, weary labor it has been for us to bring about even the present crisis in our City affairs; which, after all, is one only full of hope. More than a year's hard work has brought us only so far upon the road toward reform. Had we not been able to procure copies of the monstrous warrants; had not Mr. FOLEY been disposed by a previous experience to take up any fair cause of quarrel with the Ring; had not Mayor HALL and his fellows, in that weak, demented way, asked Controller CONNOLLY to commit hari-kari for their benefit, and thus disposed him to make Mr. GREEN his Deputy,—we should not have got on even as far as we are now. And even now these men are all in their offices; one of them has within a few days had the effrontery to offer himself for nomination as Senator, and has been nominated; they still have their places, their power, their patronage, and their plunder; and from these, notwithstanding all that has been revealed, notwithstanding all that has been done, and all that is about being done in the Courts, it will be a work of much time and labor to bring them to justice.

Let us not willfully blind ourselves to the truth. The situation is hopeful, but the cause of honest government is not yet certain of success. A great deal of hard work still remains to be done, and unless we can put such a brand on these men that they will be driven by the law, or at least by an ordinary sense of decency in the public, out of the political field, they will laugh at all that has been hitherto done as a mere party manœuvre of their political enemies, and they will throw themselves again upon their constituents, and will be sustained. They are protected in a great measure by the inflexibility of our political system, and again in a great measure by the fact that the mingled social and political condition of affairs in New-York enables them to be independent of the general opinion of decent and intelligent persons, which in any other city in this country would be a power before which no public man in these days can stand. But our official plunderers hold their places in virtue of a law, exact, supreme, unvoidable. There is no question of custom, or usage, or the public good, or responsibility to any superior, or the power of any superior or magistrate. They can be displaced only by process of law, more or less tedious. They are responsible only to the law and to their constituents; and being elected according to a written law for a definite term, their very constituents, even if they wished to do so, could not displace them before the expiration of that term, except by process of law. And as to public opinion,—to every man public opinion is the opinion of his world; and what is the opinion of their world, the world they care for? Was not Mr. TWEED renominated last week for Senator?

And as to an inquiry into the honesty of their administration, they are protected against that by obstacles that are almost insuperable. Have they not been found so? With what infinite pains and difficulty, and by what a union of happy chances, have we at last begun to get at the real condition of affairs in the Controller's office. This does not seem like that direct responsibility to the people that is one of the cardinal dogmas of democracy. French peasants under LOUIS XV. would hardly have had more trouble, or been more severely snubbed, in an inquiry into the condition of the royal exchequer filled by their toil and their suffering. Nor is this the democracy of Greece, where a man was called to give an account of his stewardship directly to the people, and if he failed to do so to their satisfaction, received then and there sentence of fine, banishment, or death, which was put into speedy execution. We cannot manage our public affairs in that way, (and it is well for us that we cannot,) nor can it be permitted that any man, or any ten, or any hundred men shall walk into a public department, financial or other, with the right to investigate its affairs or put its head and his clerks to the question. Public officers are the servants of the people; but it is of the whole people, the body politic, and not of the separate individuals of which that body is composed. But all the more, because of this precise legal tenure of office, and these protections against volunteer inspection and interference, should there be some provision by law for the examination of the accounts of every important financial officer. Then let the Municipal officials be made directly amenable to the common law, and give citizens the right to seek redress from them when they are injured, under reasonable restrictions, and our present difficulties could scarcely occur again.

The Task of the Grand Jury.

In his charge to the Grand Jury yesterday, Judge BARNARD called attention to some of the chief sources of local corruption with an outspoken vigor and directness which does him infinite credit. If the jury are prepared to deal with the evils indicated with anything like corresponding vigor, their sessions will be forever memorable in connection with the great battle for social and political reform. Their notice was very properly called to the thievish practices of the emigrant runners, who have, under Tammany protection and patronage, lately enjoyed unusual facilities for plunder. The issue of obscene books and advertisements was also adverted to, and unless the District-Attorney is shamefully remiss in his duty, the Grand Jury will be able to return such bills of indictment as shall compel the New-York Herald and its weekly rivals in this department, to abandon their infamous partnership with abortionists and houses of prostitution. The declaration of Judge BARNARD with reference to the enforcement of penalties for election frauds, will elicit the warmest approval of every friend of good government. The Court of Oyer and Terminer will be kept open, and the Grand Jury will be kept in session, till after the election, and no judicial effort will be spared to give the repeaters and ballot-stuffers a speedy transit to the State Prison. Perhaps the most significant part, however, of Judge BARNARD'S charge is that referring to the long array of gamblers, loafers, and convicted felons who are supported by the money of the tax-payers, for the sole purpose of cheating them out of their votes. It is bad enough to find the grossest forms of vice made familiar to the domestic circle by unprincipled newspapers, but it is still worse that the earnings of every family in this City should be taxed to support, as Judge BARNARD shows they are, lewd women and men steeped in crime. The newspaper can be rejected by decent people; the tax must be paid whether we like it or not. If the Grand Jury will assist, as Judge BARNARD tells them they can, in compelling the sinecurists either to go to work and get an honest living, or else take to the highway as the shortest cut to the State Prison or the gallows, they will earn for themselves a name which the people will not willingly let die.

The thorough purging which Deputy Controller GREEN is about to make of the pay-rolls which come under his jurisdiction, will not remove the necessity for such action. Many of the Departments cannot be reached from the Controller's office, and until the entire municipal administration is placed in the hands of honest men, there will be no reduction made in the list of TWEED'S villainous henchmen or of SWEENY'S family connections saddled on the tax-payers. There need be very little difficulty in finding data sufficient to indict the men who keep up the fraudulent pay-rolls. We have already given certain indications of where the most flagrant abuses are to be found. We give others of a similar kind this morning, and if strictly legal proof be wanting, the Grand Jury can summon before them the parties necessary to afford such evidence. But it is not only the men "who," in the language of Judge BARNARD, "never pretend to come near the City Hall except to get their pay," that live on the community through the aid of the pay-rolls. In the list of County officials, published today, will be found the name of CHARLES E. WILSON, first stenographer of the Supreme Court, at a salary of $3,500 a year, and again as stenographer of the Bureau of Elections, at a salary of $2,000 a year. When it is remembered that this person is also President of TWEED'S Printing Company, President of TWEED'S Stationers' Company, editor of TWEED & Co.'s Transcript, and is supposed to exercise certain accessory functions in the County Bureau, as a salary of $5,500 a year, it will be seen that he is quite as notorious a public plunderer as the bar-room loafer who makes no pretense of knowing anything about the duties he is supposed to perform.

If the Grand Jury are to bring in bills of indictment with the view of purging the pay-rolls, it is difficult to see why they should stop there. For example, Mr. SWEENY has been openly accused in these columns of ante-dating the lease of a building which he rents to the City through his agent at six times its actual value. This is a transaction quite as fraudulent as the procedure of the sinecurists whom Judge BARNARD singles out for condemnation. It may be questioned, also, whether Mr. BELMONT'S bargain with the Ring, alluded to at yesterday's meeting of the Board of Apportionment, would stand a strict legal scrutiny. That six per cent. City bonds should be privately made over to a single house at 104½ when they could certainly have brought in the open market 112½, looks very like a conspiracy against the tax-payers, and might profitably be considered by the Grand Jury. It is very comforting to be assured that Mr. BELMONT may be induced to waive any objection to the public and unrestricted issue of further bonds. Mr. SWEENY, in conveying the information, might have added that it would be a very substantial gain to the City Treasury were Mr. BELMONT to return to the Controller the bonds he purchased at 104½, on the understanding that the consent of both parties was necessary to a further issue. By insisting on his bargain, he would be compelled to prove what his damages consisted in, and the monstrous profit shown on the transaction would bring out its very questionable nature. Perhaps, however, the Grand Jury will find its hands well enough filled by adhering to the suggestions of the Court.

Discounting Newspaper Enmities.

If anybody wants to see an illustration of the truth that a newspaper is only powerful when it deals honestly with the public, he has only to consider the lessons taught by the course of the New-York Herald during the past few months.

It used to be said by some simple people that the "influence" of the Herald was enormous. "Only let us get the Herald on our side, and we can do what we like." That was A. OAKEY HALL'S idea. Well, the Herald for months past has been working with might and main to save the Tammany Ring. It had various reasons for this—some personal, some political. They may be worth discussing another day—at present it is only necessary to remind the public that the Herald left no stone unturned to protect the entire Tammany gang. It deliberately suppressed all the evidence against the rogues—which was as much a fraud upon the public as any of TWEED'S, HALL'S, or SWEENY'S. It boasted of having "fifteen editorial writers, one-third European," and this galaxy of talent was set to work to bolster up HALL and his cronies. The exposures of the TIMES were denounced as false, and the TIMES itself was vituperated as being "English," because it did its duty to the community, and told the truth without fear or favor. This row-de-dow was kept up until it was too plain to admit of doubt that in an uninterrupted fight of fifteen months we were destined to win, and then the Herald was obliged to vary its manufactured telegrams and its trumpery "editorials" about Queen VICTORIA with a little news about New-York.

Now, has the Herald saved the Ring? What has been the result of its wonderful "influence?" Who has believed its report? TWEED, SWEENY, and HALL have had the Herald slavishly on their side, and what the better are they for it today? The Herald has eagerly published what A. OAKEY HALL wished, and yet it is obliged after all to adopt the very views which we put forward last August twelvemonth. It comes into the field fifteen months behind us, when the hard fighting is over, and yesterday it was obliged to print the fraudulent warrants which we published last July. So much for enterprise! It now abuses the City charter which it lately praised. In fact, it is obliged to take the same dirty track along which the World has been crawling. If the Herald ever had any influence, what has become of it now?

As for the way in which the Herald is dealing with the crisis, let intelligent readers peruse the following extracts from its yesterday's issue, and decide for themselves as to the quality of the "fifteen editorial writers, one-third European":

"A Herald reporter last evening alighted from a Sixth-avenue car while it was still at full speed, reached the sidewalk in safety and wended his way through Twenty-seventh-street toward Broadway. The evening was one of sombre beauty, but the yellow lights of the street lamps showed the objects that usually mark a quiet up-town street. The brown-stone fronts and stoop-stone that stared ponderously in the face of the reporter did not change their aspect, although his features were fixed in deep thought and his meditations dwelt on no less a subject than the probable fate of Gotham's Chief Magistrate, ABRAHAM OAKEY HALL. Rumors that his excellent person was in imminent danger of the incarceration had floated through the mellow atmosphere of the Empire City, all the way from the Little Yorkville Court to the office of the Herald. Even the ragged gobbins whom common sense humanity has termed boot-blacks, in front of the black pile of St. Paul's, were full of the inspiration of the hour." &c.

In the sea of twaddle which the Herald is now spreading before its readers on this subject—by way of atoning for its past neglect, and relieving its mind of the "Queen VICTORIA" craze—there was one grain of sense yesterday. It spoke of "noisy FELLOWS strutting in rebel gray." The FELLOWS thus alluded to was brought here by SWEENY to fill the office of Assistant District-Attorney. His only qualifications for this post were that he had been a rebel officer, that he was willing to act as a tool of the Ring to any extent, and that he had a gift for steering cowardly slanders, well knowing them to be false. FELLOWS will have to go when his master is thrown out, and it will be a happy day for the City when all such pretenders are driven out of it.

MINOR TOPICS.

The affidavits which have been prepared against Mayor HALL, and which he will be called upon to answer this morning, assume him of willfully and intentionally neglecting to examine into the fraudulent claims presented against the City—of being guilty of acts of malfeasance in office, done with corrupt intent—of knowingly permitting KEENAN, GARVEY, and others fraudulently to convert large sums to their own use. These are among the charges brought against him. We believe, and hope, that on these charges A. OAKEY HALL will, sooner or later, be convicted. They are supported by a mass of evidence, in preparing which one man has been particularly industrious—Mr. W. S. COFFIN, formerly a clerk in the Controller's office. Without Mr. COFFIN'S help, the case against the Tammany Ring could not have been so strong. He has acted the part of an honorable man throughout, and has done nothing to detract himself by the exposures he assisted to make. His conduct entitles him to the thanks of all honest citizens.

"Had the German Democrats then (last Fall) chosen to co-operate with us, OAKEY HALL and CONNOLLY would have been beaten by Anti-Ring Democrats, and the tide of Municipal corruption arrested and rolled back. It was the solid vote of the German Democrats that gave the Ring the lease of power which it now abuses. Republican candidates for their places were in the field, and the only choice was between the Ring and its Democratic adversaries."

The above is from the Tribune of Yesterday. The fault does not betem exclusively to the German Democrats. It is shared by the Tribune's own friends. Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS chose the eve of the election as a fitting time for issuing a certificate of honesty to the Ring, and after election he boasted that he had personally caused over three hundred persons to vote for A. OAKEY HALL. And yet Mr. MARSHALL O. ROBERTS is held up to us by the Tribune as a model Reform man.

Mayor HALL is as much a despot in his mean little way as LOUIS NAPOLEON. If he could do as he liked, there would be no free Press in this City to-morrow. He framed the infamous "Amendments to the Code" for the express purpose of prohibiting the newspapers from making any honest criticisms on our local rulers. Like many another man whose actions will not bear the light, he wants to gag free thought and free speech. Last week he made a raid upon Wild Oats—a publication of which we confess we had never heard before. It is now stated that he means to try the same move with Harper's Weekly. All HARPER'S books have been thrown out of the public schools because they are "too Protestant" in character for the Catholic managers of those schools. The Mayor will find that he has undertaken a tough job in crushing Harper's Weekly. He might as well try to suppress the Falls of Niagara. How long more are we to have such a man as this Mayor of the City?

The return of Mr. SEWARD to his native State, after a journey of such extraordinary extent, will be the subject of sincere and general congratulation. There was something in the undertaking now so happily concluded, peculiarly characteristic of the honored statesman. At a period of life when most men are content to seek the repose of absolute retirement, and after labors which certainly justified him in seeking repose, Mr. SEWARD sought in travel the aims which are usually thought to be attainable only by young men, with life as well as the world before them. With indomitable energy he undertook a trip around the world, carried it out in this way, a project which he had long entertained. He has witnessed the fatigues of travel admirably, and has been enabled to enjoy with keen relish the pleasures of his novel experiences. He has been everywhere received with the utmost attention, and has naturally received universal expressions of respect, due not less to his own reputation than to the country he has so honorably served.

The policy of amalgamating railway companies again attracts attention in England. The evils of competition have become, in some instances, very serious, and remedies are naturally anxiously discussed. As naturally the obvious panacea that alone renders competition impossible finds strong advocates. "The sole condition," argues one publicist, "is that railways shall be managed, not as separate sections of a disjointed machine, but as one united system, as a great high-road, and in a spirit of co-operation." This, of course, is plausible, and more than plausible, it is true. Yet the plan is none the less, as a matter of expediency, totally inadmissible. The objections to gigantic corporations are in the nature of things greater than can possibly exist to any species of competition. Nevertheless, as a matter of fact railway companies, both in Europe and America, do unquestionably gravitate toward practical amalgamation. The evils we ourselves already suffer, and the dangers with which we are threatened from this cause, have been ably pointed out; yet in spite of the North American Review, the debate has so far been purely academical. A great battle will, however, be fought on this subject hereafter—possibly eventuating in the control of all railways by the State.

What comes from the Jewish Liberal must be taken with Bonaparte salt, but what it reports of Mr. SEWARD is among the things that are good enough to make us wish them true. It seems Mr. SEWARD was entertained the other day at a grand banquet given by Gen. BANKS. A great number of distinguished people were there, and one gentleman, of the "interviewer" order, on declining to drink to Secretary SEWARD'S optimist notions on the present and future of French politics; whereupon, as remarked by the present reporter above, what followed was the veteran statesman's reply: "I have no opinion to express on the subject. I have been in France a good many times. I was here under a Republic which they called an Empire, and I am at present in France under an Empire which they call a Republic." Even those who question the strict accuracy of this statement must certainly acknowledge its adroitness. Most of the prominent individuals in Paris are now readily quoting "on the fence," and Mr. SEWARD'S reticence, by way of balance-pole, should be highly appreciated.

VICTOR EMMANUEL has Knighted a Shaman. His name is GIACINTO OTTINO, and he is described as being "a man of genius." It is not because of his eminent gore and nose that the honor has come upon him. He must have excelled in their line all exceedingly without becoming a "revelator." But his powers take a far more rational and peculiar direction. He invents the shoes for the aforesaid feet—shoes mainly cut out of tin, which support flames and ornament all manner of objects, such as canes, hats, water-spouts, sewers and so on. By some device he has superseded the inescapable Mephistopheles of Italy, and he has his reward. History records the rise to nobility of many a "butcher and baker," but this is perhaps the first instance wherein a "conjuration maker" has achieved such a distinction.

Great as are the frauds which we are exposing from day to day, it is evident that the strongest lever which can be used to unseat the rascals in power is presented in the Ingersoll, Garvey and Keyser accounts. We give today the story of the ex-clerk mythical PEDRO DOMINGUEZ, showing how GARVEY induced him to assume a claim which he never had against the City. A transaction like this will help to convict Mayor HALL of gross neglect of duty, if not of worse. In signing warrants which were obtained by forgery and deceit, both gross and obvious. In order to follow the legal proceedings which have now commenced against the leading members of the Ring, a perpetual reference to our list of warrants will be found necessary. The Times perpetual supplies these in full, in English and German, and ought to be in the hands of every citizen who wishes to thoroughly understand and appreciate the progress of the work of reform.

The Tammany Frauds.

From the Saturday Review, Sept. 23.

The perpetrators of the New-York frauds have apparently been disappointed in their expectation that the whole affair would blow over. Their hopes were founded on a long course of precedent, for their dishonesty has been for some years generally known and deliberately tolerated, but in the end paradoxical experience proves an unsafe guide. In fable and proverb the plunder is at last restored, or the typical wolf becomes real; and, in the exigencies of the community, honesty appears likely to obtain a temporary triumph even in the City of New-York. The merit of the probable change will belong exclusively to the newspapers, and writers of the New-York TIMES, who have replied with pure perseverance and courage on the ultimate prevalence of truth. That the rulers of the City and the State were a gang of worthless and impudent scoundrels was doubtless known by their friends and by their enemies; but the imaginations of most men are too feeble and vague to embody the abstract notion of rascality in millions of stolen dollars. Instead of wasting time and energy in mixed contests against the New-York Democracy, which generally ended in the triumph of the party which possessed the largest number of votes, the TIMES has brought the unparalleled amount of the frauds home to those who had been committed. All parties in New-York know beforehand that both TWEED and FOX, after becoming bankrupt as petty tradesmen, had, notwithstanding their want of any visible source of subsistence, contrived to spend large sums and to live in a style of luxury and splendor. It could not be doubted that they flourished at the expense of the ratepayers, except on the assumption that they had the resources of robbing the treasurers of the State Railway; yet there was neither protest nor attempt at restitution until the NEW-YORK TIMES undertook to publish the evidence which was laid before the Common Council and the County Court-house and on the ballot-box.

From the Spectator, Sept. 23.

The chiefs of the Tammany Ring who now govern New-York have shown how unpleasant they can make the position of any man who dares to oppose their sovereign will. If a citizen shows public spirit, he is persecuted by taxes assessed at an extravagant rate; or if a spirited and able newspaper like the NEW-YORK TIMES courageously exposes official malpractices, its property is attacked by the Corporation in a frivolous and vexatious suit. Again, the fact that the Tammany Ring, with its organized machinery for electoral frauds, and its command of vast sums of money, has been at the disposal of the Democratic Party for political purposes, had induced hitherto even respectable Democrats to wink at its proceedings. For all these reasons public spirit and readiness to make sacrifices for the general interest have been fatally wanting among the decent classes in New-York; they have shrunk from encountering the evils of the world from insisting on the responsibility of the municipal officers to the newspapers, from demanding a strict account of the expenditure of the public money. Naturally, rowdyism has had all its own way at election, and corruption has returned unpunished to the scene of its triumphs. We cannot but hope that the Tammany Ring, thus left to work their will with the Government and taxpayers of the greatest city in the New World, have robbed and misused the citizens to a degree never paralleled anywhere, and almost surpassing belief. We have a sketch a few weeks ago of the fraud which has been perpetrated in the Erie Railway, which has been followed up by three articles in the past two or three numbers of the TIMES, which the New-York Times had exposed with honorable persistence in a disagreeable duty. The battle has now ceased to be a duel between Tammany Hall and the TIMES. The moderate party of Messrs. DEREIM, BEDELL, HARJES & Co., Bankers, No. 2 Rue Scribe, Paris, are the accredited agents for the NEW-YORK TIMES in that city.

"THE STREETS OF NEW-YORK" AT NIBLO'S.

We are not able to devote much space to the consideration of matters at Niblo's Theatre, nor does the tender age of the piece—the familiar drama called "The Streets of New-York"—demand an extended review of its fundamentals. But we can say, within the bounds, that Mr. BOUCICAULT'S work is admirably represented there every night. It is admirably represented in all respects, for it is cleverly acted. Mr. FRANK MAYO depicting Badger with a skill and an effect of no ordinary kind, and it is beautifully illustrated by scenery of which everybody can recognize the truthfulness as well as the pictorial excellence. Fraught with these special attractions, to which credit is to be added the appropriate and eloquent music of Signor OSBORNE, "The Streets of New-York," which have been already graced upon two very large audiences, will doubtless be shown for many successive nights.

THE ROCHESTER CONVENTION.

Preparations Gathering—The Night Over Tammany—Probable Nomination of the Ring—Candidates.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Oct. 3.—The city has been filling up rapidly all day with delegates to the Democratic State Convention, to be held to-morrow. Each delegation being accompanied by scores of spectators, it will be the largest gathering of the Democracy that has been seen in the State for years. The fight over contests in the front again, and once more as HORATIO SEYMOUR, SAMUEL J. TILDEN, FRANCIS KERNAN, SANFORD E. CHURCH, and the Rike, who have been thrust aside for 7 years past by the thieves and bullies on Tammany Hall, will to-morrow guide the councils of the Democracy.

THE NEW-YORK DELEGATIONS.

The main body of Gotham men today has been the rural delegations from New-York. The Anti-Tammany delegation arrived early this morning. Their opponents have some pretense to claim by the different trains, the first on the ground being Assistant District-Attorney FELLOWS. The bulk of the delegation, accompanied by "Boss" TWEED, is expected in at 12 o'clock this evening. And will bring with them the Shandley Legion, numbering 300 Tammany rabble soldiers. It will be a curious sight for no possible event will the Tammany delegation be admitted to seats in the Convention. That can be ruled on. The Anti-Tammany delegation is a unit in the determination not to occupy seats in the Convention with the Tammanyites, under any circumstances. If the latter are admitted or recognized in any way they will withdraw. The Tammany men, like their allies at the Republican Convention, lay great stress on the question of regularity, and it is admitted that on this point their claims are unanswerable. But the Anti-Tammany delegation say that in the present situation of the party regularity or irregularity is of no consequence—that it is a question whether the Democratic Party shall admit to its State Conventions thieves and their representatives or honest men. The contest is not over the existence of the party they say is at stake.

PROBABLE EXCLUSION OF TAMMANY.

A large majority of the delegates from the rural districts evidently take this view of the situation, and no circumstance of flattery or the champions, not even the mighty reasons alleged to have been advanced by the great lobbyist, "AD." HARMER, who has been active since early morning, have thus far succeeded in changing the situation. Feeling that they are dust of defeat if they enter the contest, the Tammany Delegation has been trying hard the evening to bring about a compromise. They have even offered to abstain from any active part in the Convention, and to allow the Convention to appoint substitutes for the delegates sent here from among the Anti-Tammany men, provided their claims to regularity are recognized. This will be rejected, and as a last resort, the Tammany delegates will probably send a paper or remonstrance to the Convention, to the effect that no charges are now pending against certain leaders of Tammany Hall, they will unconditionally relinquish their right to seats and support the ticket nominated by the Convention, whatever it may be. Like Gov. BULLOCK of the Massachusetts Convention, they will refuse to leave the party even after they are kicked out, knowing full well that there is no where else for them to go. The Brooklyn Delegation will support Tammany in a body, if the issue is raised before the Convention, but outside of more two-thirds of the delegation are in favor of repudiating Tammany allegiance.

ABOUT THE ORGANIZATION.

ex-Gov. SEYMOUR will probably be the permanent President of the Convention. CHAS. O'CONOR, who was to head the anti-Tammany delegation, will not be here, but a letter from him will be presented by his alternate, R. D. HAMILTON, which will coincide with the sentiments of the old leaders of the Democratic Party, that Tammany Hall has disgraced the name of Democracy, and should no longer be tolerated under its present leaders.

THE TICKET.

The subject of candidates has scarcely been mooted as yet, but it is understood that Ex-Senator HUBBARD is already a candidate for Secretary of State; GEO. W. CUTLER, for Controller; SMITH M. WEED, for Attorney-General; MILLIKEN, for Canal Commissioner; D. J. HASTINGS, for Treasurer; E. E. JOHNS, for State Prison Inspector, and W. M. WALWORTH, for City Engineer. There is a general disposition to nominate a new ticket throughout for State officers.

ARRIVAL OF THE "BOSS."

Twelve O'clock P. M.—"Boss" TWEED arrived in town at 10 o'clock this evening, and took rooms at the Osburn House. His friends tried to get up a demonstration in his favor as he entered the hotel, but it was a failure. He was accompanied by TOM FIELDS. The remainder of the Tammany delegation, together with the Shandley Legion, is expected in about midnight by the Erie Railroad. Since the arrival of TWEED the Tammany men appear more cheerful, but I cannot hear that there is any improvement in their prospects for being admitted to the Convention. A portion of them are in favor of contesting for their rights to seats to the last extremity, but the majority would gladly compromise by staying away from the Convention, provided the other side would do the same. The Anti-Tammany men decline any compromise whatever, and will be seated with neither short of their admission to the full privileges of delegates, and the utter exclusion of the Tammany delegation. If the question has to be settled in Convention there will be a stormy time, and probably a disgraceful row, as New-York roughs are largely represented here. The Tammany men intimate that if they are not respectfully treated by the Convention they shall give no support to the ticket nominated, and that if the rural Democracy think they can elect their ticket without the aid of Tammany, they had better try it. The last effort of Tammany is to try and induce the Convention to exclude both delegations, but it will not succeed. As before stated, Tammany will not be admitted under any circumstances, and the only point undecided is whether she will receive the humiliation quietly or create a row over it.

LUCIUS ROBINSON is spoken of for temporary Chairman.

THE TAMMANY DELEGATES.

Their Reporters for Rochester Yesterday—A Motley Crew of Rowdies and Fieldpockets.

As early as 7½ yesterday morning, the Erie Depot was thronged with the members of delegations and their retainers, and from that hour until 8 o'clock every boat brought reinforcements to the motley crowd. The probable action of the Convention at Rochester, whither they were bound, was freely discussed, and the chances of the exclusion of the Tammanyites fully canvassed.

What o'clock there was about 300 politicians in the depot, not particularly boisterous; the hour was most too early for characteristic demonstrations, and it is possible that the publicity given to their sportiveness last year, in a measure restrained them until they had placed some distance between New-York and themselves. It was the intention of the managers of the road to run a special train, but the project was abandoned, and the crowd crammed on to the No. 1.

When the depot gates were opened there was no more disturbing by the party in this city, and words to contemplate was the constitution of each delegation. Those only members of the delegation were the custodians of mystic baskets, were carried hither and thither like leaves on the wind, and finally emerged from the struggle with sadly ruffled plumage and tempers. Occasionally a small man, prominent either in politics and conventions, would be drawn into the vortex of the struggle, and in a short time would be cast out and left to meditate upon the gloomy wherefores and ultimate fate of his beaver. People, who were in any way given to reflection, stood aloof and waited with unviable patience, until the "delegates" had provided themselves and their luck with seats, and then went deliberately in search of what might be left for them.

At a few minutes past 8 the signal sounded, and the train started with its precious freight. For a half hour after its departure the excitement continued to derive, and loud and undistinct were the laments dispatched after the retreating train. As the Register CONSOLIDATED walked into the cars, and was hailed with every demonstration of delight by his friends in misery. A newspaper was soon found, and the line of march taken to the neighboring hotel, where the remainder of the day was passed in discussing the situation. Feeling that they are dust of defeat if they enter the contest, the Tammany Delegation has been trying hard the evening to bring about a compromise. They have even offered to abstain from any active part in the Convention, and to allow the Convention to appoint substitutes for the delegates sent here from among the Anti-Tammany men, provided their claims to regularity are recognized. This will be rejected, and as a last resort, the Tammany delegates will probably send a paper or remonstrance to the Convention, to the effect that no charges are now pending against certain leaders of Tammany Hall, they will unconditionally relinquish their right to seats and support the ticket nominated by the Convention, whatever it may be. Like Gov. BULLOCK of the Massachusetts Convention, they will refuse to leave the party even after they are kicked out, knowing full well that there is no where else for them to go. The Brooklyn Delegation will support Tammany in a body, if the issue is raised before the Convention, but outside of more two-thirds of the delegation are in favor of repudiating Tammany allegiance.

THE GERMAN REPUBLICANS.

They Endorse the Action of the Syracuse Convention—Address by Several Members of the Central Committee.

The German Republican Central Committee, Mr. SIGMUND KAUFMANN presiding, met at the Stadtban House last evening. Mr. BEYDLER, on behalf of the Executive Committee, recommended certain gentlemen to be appointed as a committee, to confer with the German Democracy, to effect joint and united action on the part of the German voters of this City during the campaign, as far as the war against corrupt Tammany is concerned.

Mr. BEYDLER'S recommendation was adopted, and the following gentlemen were appointed: Messrs. Fred. Kilian, Andreas Willmann, W. Gellmann, L. Naumann, Dr. Geks, and ex-officio, Sigismund Kaufmann.

Ex-Coroner NAUMANN, on behalf of the delegation of the Committee to the Syracuse Convention, submitted a report on the proceedings of said Convention, and the nomination of the ticket nominated by that Convention.

SIGMUND KAUFMANN was satisfied with the result of the Syracuse Convention.

Dr. NAUMANN said that all party considerations should be laid aside, and the agitation should aim only at the defeat of Tammany and the thieves connected with the same.

Dr. GEBER urged that the nominations of Syracuse be adhered to.

On motion of Mr. BOMMER, a resolution was passed empowering the Conference Committee appointed to confer with the German Democratic General Committee on the subject of uniting joint and united action in the pending affairs, to confer also with the committee or committees in opposition to Tammany Ring rule and corruption.

The following resolutions were passed:

The German American Republicans of New-York, under the full conviction that unity within the party is the chief condition of every success, have ever kept down the spirit of factious opposition, and refused to remove the dissensions which, in former occasions, and threatening the reorganization entered by the state Committee. We perceive, however, with regret, that these dissensions and disagreements unity have been revived, and we condemn the action of those delegates who seceded from the Convention, and who by their resolutions endeavored to widen the break in the party. We express our sorrow that the said secession step with premeditation, before the ballot was fully and fairly taken, and we declare that only under the pretended slightest may seem discover that maintaining this course will put them in the same category with those who, under the mask of Republicans, are only serving the purposes of the Tammany Ring; we express our regret that the delegates seceded from their party will be welcomed in spirit of more cordiality than is at present manifested. We protest against the obstructionist tactics of the Hon. Gen. Worth, of the United Democracy of Kings county, and we recognize in the name put forward well known and honored citizens, and pledge them our hearty support. We hope that the compromise and union ticket will receive the support of the Democracy to be elected in the spring of next autumn, and that the State Committee will recognize their duty to harmonize the different organized bodies in the City in the name of the great majority of Republicans, and certain gentlemen to be appointed as a committee to confer with the Democratic Committee, to effect joint and united action on the part of the German voters of this City during the campaign, as far as the war against corrupt Tammany is concerned.

KINGS COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

Raising Meeting of the General Committee—Last Night's Disorderly Manoeuvres—Attempt to Break Up the Meeting—The Police Called In.

One of the most disgraceful meetings of the Republican General Committee of Kings County that ever took place was held last evening in Commonwealth Hall, in Washington-street. The disturbance was entirely caused by the Blue men, headed by E. D. WORTH, who, from the moment they entered the room, commenced to hoot, howl, and annoy in every conceivable manner their opponents. This wrath appeared to be first excited by a resolution offered by the Executive Committee providing that nominating conventions for County Officers be held on the 12th, 14th, and 16th inst., and those for the election of delegates to those Conventions be held on the 13th inst. And, moreover, that more they had not the exact text of the resolution passed by the State Convention allotting the basis of representation. It was then moved to take any action in the matter on this night.

To this Mr. WORTH, one of the Blue faction, offered an amendment providing that the whole matter of changing the basis of representation be referred to a special committee of sixteen gentlemen—all of whom were Blue men—to report at their next meeting, providing for the holding of primaries to all State Conventions hereafter.

To this Mr. TRACEY objected, on the ground that it would supersede the inspectors of election already appointed by the General Committee. That, he said, could not be done except by an amendment to the constitution and by-laws, which required a two-thirds vote.

Mr. WARREN replied at length, denying the position taken by Mr. TRACEY, and contending that the resolution in no way contemplated a violation of either the Constitution or by-laws. Several other amendments were then submitted and voted down in their turn, after which WORTH'S amendment was put and carried by a small majority, but the Chairman declared the amendment lost, because he held that aiming as it did at a revision of the by-laws it required a two-third vote to carry it. This announcement was the signal for a scene of the most intense disorder, men stood upon the chairs, waved their canes and shouted in all manner of ways, but the "ayes" of their voice, and Mr. WEBSTER, the acknowledged leader, stood in front of the Chairman, and in a threatening manner shook his fist, and protested that no further business would be permitted to be done until the Chairman, Mr. DUYCKINCK reversed his decision. This Mr. DUYCKINCK refused to do, and insisted that order be restored. To accomplish that was an impossibility for the Sergeant-at-Arms, so a platoon of Police, headed by Capt. SMITH, from the First Precinct, was called in, and things were quieted down by having all persons not members of the Committee removed from the room. During the turmoil several panes of glass were broken and two or three gentlemen were pushed about in an exceedingly rough manner. The room having been cleared, however, the business of the meeting was resumed, and carried to a close in a more temperate manner.

On motion of Alderman BUCHANNON, resolutions were adopted indorsing the action of the State Convention and the gentlemen nominated by it for office.

The meeting then adjourned.

HON. JOSEPH P. BARNARD.

The Republican Convention Nominates Him as Judge of the Supreme Court of the Second Judicial District.

The Republican Convention for the nomination of a Supreme Court Justice for the Second Judicial District met in Room No. 7 of the Kings County Court yesterday. Hon. THOMAS NELSON, of Westchester, presided. The following resolutions were offered by Mr. CARPENTER, of Dutchess County:

WHEREAS, Hon. JOSEPH P. BARNARD during the eight years of his occupancy of the Supreme Court bench has honored the position by the learning, ability, integrity and courteous deportment that he has brought to the discharge of his official duties.

WHEREAS, His continuance upon the Bench will afford the guarantee that the business will be impartially administered and evenly meted out to all classes without personal favoritism, and without regard to political faith; therefore,

Resolved, That we do present him as the nominee of this Convention alike of his personal worth and his eminent qualifications, and also as evidence of a desire to elevate the judiciary above the arena of political strife, this Convention, ignoring all political affiliations, do now tender the nomination to the Republican electors of the Second Judicial District the name of JOSEPH P. BARNARD as their nominee for Justice of the Supreme Court.

Ex-Judge REYNOLDS, of Kings County, seconded the resolution, and made an earnest appeal to the Convention for its passage. On being put to the house, the resolution was unanimously adopted. The Convention then adjourned.

The Twenty-first District Grant Club Indorse the State Ticket and Pledge Themselves to Uproot Tammany.

A meeting of the Twenty-first District Grant Club was held last evening at Harmony Hall, Harlem, Mr. A. F. HAZADON presiding. The Club was afterward addressed by Mr. O'SHEA, who denounced Tammany in strong terms, declaring that HALL, TWEED & Co. were nothing but thieves, and that while they pretended to be the friends of the Irish element they were its worst enemies. Mr. HENRY SMITH afterward addressed the meeting in favor of President GRANT'S re-election.

The report was discussed at length, and the meeting adjourned without further action.

The Anti-Tammany Democrats of the Seventh Senatorial District held two very enthusiastic meetings last night, one on the corner of Third-avenue and Twenty-second-street, and the other on Second-avenue and Thirty-eighth-street. Both assemblages heartily indorsed the nomination of Mr. O'BRIEN for the Senatorship. It was currently reported that Mr. SWEENY'S brother-in-law will not run against the popular Democratic candidate.

POLITICAL NOTES.

The official returns of the vote in California are still incomplete.

It cost $1 50 to receive, record and count each vote cast at the late election in San Francisco.

Tuesday next, not Wednesday, will be Oct. 10, the date of the elections in Ohio, Pennsylvania and Iowa.

The Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Pennsylvania has condemned the nomination of a temperance ticket for State officers.

The Republican State Executive Committee of Mississippi is receiving encouraging reports of the progress of the canvass from most sections of the State.

An aspirant for a seat in the Legislature of Maine received fifty-three votes in the caucus, and was nominated. At the polls he received thirty-one votes only, and was defeated.

The Republican bolters in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, manifest a preference for DELANO, SHELLABARGER or GARFIELD, rather than SHERMAN, for United States Senator.

The Democrats of Massachusetts intend to send out their ablest speakers, and to thoroughly canvass the State before the November election.

The Republican Convention for the Twentieth District was held in Richfield Springs, yesterday, and nominated Hon. A. C. MCGOWAN, of Herkimer County, for Senator.

The Democrats have nominated for Assembly HENRY BRADLEY in Essex County, and ALVIN H. HALL in the First District of Jefferson County.

Hon. ADRIAN W. PALMER, of Amenia, Dutchess County, was yesterday unanimously nominated for election as Senator from the Eleventh District by the Republican Convention in Hudson.

There is to be a grand mass-meeting of Republicans in Cincinnati on Saturday evening next, the speakers at which are to be Senator John Sherman, Gov. R. B. Hayes, Gen. R. P. Noyes, A. F. Perry, Job E. Stevenson, B. Eggleston, and W. H. Clagett, of Montana.

The Republican Judicial Convention for the Eighth District yesterday had much difficulty in making a nomination. Balloting was continued during the afternoon and evening, and resulted in a tie, there being fifteen votes each for B. F. MARVIN and GEO. D. LAMONT.

A politician in San Francisco who claimed to exercise great influence among voters, has been sued for $500 by a defeated candidate for municipal honors, who alleges that he gave him that sum to advance his interests, and derived no benefit therefrom.

The San Francisco Alta does not believe it was merely a bad nomination for Governor that defeated the Democrats of California. It says that the corruption of the last Legislature, and the attempt of the Democratic leaders to sacrifice the party to a small clique governed by retrograde feelings and prejudices, would have been fatal to any ticket.

Mr. STEPHEN SPRINGSTEED has been again nominated for Assembly by the Republicans of the First District of Albany County. Two years ago he was elected to the position over his present competitor, but was cheated out of his seat. This year, the Evening Journal says, he will be elected by a majority so decided as to baffle any attempt to defeat him by fraud.

One of the numerous applicants for reduction of assessments on property in New-Orleans has received a very sharp letter from the Public Administrator, H. BOKEANO. That official says: "I can find no fault with the action of the Assessor of that district, except that he did not administer a rebuke such as you deserved for your attempt to bribe him. Citizens of wealth, and especially property-holders, should be the last to condemn extravagance, corruption, city employees and those who make such base and disreputable attempts deserve very little official recognition or consideration."

Six of the eight Wards in New-Haven went Republican on Monday, and, though the Democrats succeeded in electing their town and city officers, their majorities were greatly reduced, and the real city Government is back in the hands of the Republicans. The whole Republican Ward ticket of the First, Second, Fourth and Sixth Wards was elected, and the Alderman and two Councilmen of the Seventh Ward. This makes the Board of Aldermen stand ten Republicans and four Democrats, and the Council twenty one to seven. The Fourth Ward gives a clear gain of four Republican Councilmen. Other parts of Connecticut show corresponding Republican gains in the town elections.

The Hartford Courant is jubilant over the Republican victory in that city on Monday, and says: "Many Democrats who prefer good men in the offices of the town to party success merely for the sake of party, voted the Republican ticket and swelled the majority obtained. The Democratic ticket, though having a number of deserving candidates upon it, was contemptibly weak, taken as a whole, and its defeat is a severe rebuke to the politicians who sought to force upon the town men without the proper qualifications to hold the offices for which they were nominated. It is to be hoped that the lessons of this election will have weight in the future, leading to a purification of our local politics and teaching the ward politicians that above party the citizens of Hartford will insist upon having in places of trust men of character and responsibility."

In reply to a letter from Hon. JOSEPH BROOKS, inviting him to take part in a joint debate in Little Rock, Ark., Senator CLAYTON says: "If you desire to discuss my political and official acts, at that time, or to take issue with the doctrines laid down in the Chicago platform, I am at your service; but if you desire to form an issue that can only result in creating dissensions in the Republican Party and raising hopes in Democratic quarters, I must decline your offer, as I will not be a party to a controversy that would have a tendency to prevent a united and harmonious action of the party in the canvass of 1872. If I have mistaken the object of your letter, and your real intent is to invite me to a personal discussion of our individual merits or demerits, allow me to say to you that I shall decline to engage in any such a controversy, as the political arena is not the place to settle personal grievances."

The feeling among some of the Democrats of Seneca County against Canal Commissioner CHAPMAN is very bitter, and the Convention in the Second District to elect a delegate to the State Convention at Rochester today split. A correspondent of the Troy Times thus speaks of the matter: "Among the charges made against Mr. CHAPMAN is that he paid extravagant prices to some of the delegates who favored him in the District Convention. They say he paid $500 to the delegates from each of the towns of Edinburgh and Day, and that one of the delegates from Moreau received as much as all six from the towns above named. Then in regard to Mr. WING, the delegate in his interest for the State Convention, they charge that Mr. CHAPMAN purchased a quantity of lumber from him, had it transported by railroad to Troy, thence taken to Glen's Falls to be used on the dam there building. The authors of these stories are some of the leading men of the party here."

CASSIUS M. CLAY is to speak in St. Louis to-night. In his letter accepting the invitation he says: "St. Louis is now and ever must be the geographically commercial centre of the continent. Therefore, she is now and ever must be eminently national and patriotic. In such soil good seed cannot fail to bear fruit. I accept your invitation to utter heartfelt words in the cause of national unity. Slavery is dead. Not even DAVIS and STEPHENS and TOOMBS propose to revive it. The equality of all before the law remains to be established, and suffrage made universal by a general amnesty of the white race. The war is over; the South accepts the situation; the wealth and intelligence of the country cannot, with safety, be excluded from the government of the country. Hatreds, and revenges, and vain-glorious triumphs belong not to statesmanship. We must not only 'forgive but forget;' we must have peace; war measures must cease; we must return at once to the normal condition of republicanism—constitutional law. Thus only will our sacrifices in the great war be made fruitful and our Union forever indestructible."

Senator Norton and City Sinecures.

The statement printed in your journal on Monday, that I hold no less than twelve sinecures in this City, is untrue. I have never held a sinecure, either directly or indirectly, and have never drawn a cent from the City Treasury except the salary belonging to an office to which the people have elected me. In March, 1870, while in the State Senate, I introduced and advocated the passage of an "Act to Consolidate the City and County of New-York," the fourth section of which was as follows:

SECTION 4. No payment shall be made from the City and County Treasury to any public officer receiving a salary or other regular and stated compensation therefrom, for or on account of any other office or service whatever, either as a salary or compensation or otherwise, and no such officer shall hold any other office within the City and County of New-York, nor shall any payment be made from the said Treasury to any public officer, or for any extra services, or for any extra compensation, or for any fees respectively in excess of salary; but this section shall not be held to prevent the necessary the District Attorney and the Counsel to the Corporation of such costs and allowances as are daily authorized by law to meet the employment and payment of teachers and janitors in our public schools in and for more than one situation under the school system, nor to prevent the receipt of fees by public officers who are authorized by law to receive fees.

Only two Republicans (LAWRY and SCOTT) voted to make this act the special order, while eleven voted against it. I am now more than ever convinced that that act should have been passed, and will gladly endeavor to press a similar bill through the Legislature this Winter, should I be re-elected to the Senate.

Yours truly, MICHAEL NORTON.

WASHINGTON NEWS.

Official Reception of Prince Alexis—Personals.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 3.—The preparations for the official reception of the Russian fleet and Prince ALEXIS, by the navy, have been practically decided upon. Secretary ROBESON has issued orders that the fleet which shall tender the honors to the Russian visitors shall be composed of the frigate Congress, now at New-York, sitting out for the Mediterranean, the Severn, Admiral LEE'S flagship, now at Hampton Roads, the Iroquois, now at Philadelphia, preparing to sail for the East Indies, and the Kansas, also at Philadelphia. These vessels will be attended by several tugs, and the fleet will be under the command of Vice-Admiral ROWAN, Port Admiral of New-York, who will hoist his flag on the Congress. Admiral LEE, who commands the North Atlantic Squadron, which includes all the naval vessels on these stations, will attend Admiral ROWAN in his own flag-ship. The vessels are ordered to rendezvous at New-York, ready to receive the Russians by the 10th inst. They will pass down to the Lower Bay, and as soon as the Russian fleet is signaled they will pass out to sea to receive them. Inasmuch as the Prince comes as a sub-officer on Admiral POISETT'S flag-ship, the Swetland, the naval honors will be tendered rather to the fleet than to royalty. The Prince will land, and it is understood that he will proceed at once to Washington to pay his respects to the President, returning immediately after to New-York. Our naval officers will subsequently entertain the officers of the Russian fleet with various festivities, among which will be a ball on board the Congress. The anticipated visit of this distinguished gentleman, with his suite, and the return this week of the President and nearly all the Cabinet, promises to awaken Washington from its lethargy, and to infuse life into the channels of society and politics here which have been sluggish for so many months.

PERSONAL.

A considerable number of clerks will leave here to-morrow and on Thursday, to attend the elections in Ohio and Pennsylvania. Secretary ROBESON leaves to-morrow morning for Dayton, where he is engaged to speak on Friday night. He will be accompanied by Secretary DELANO, and they will return on Wednesday next.

OBITUARY.

Brevet Brig.-Gen. James Totten.

A St. Louis dispatch announces the death of Gen. JAMES TOTTEN, at Sedalia, Mo., on Monday. He was a native of Pennsylvania, and graduated at West Point in 1841. He served on the border, and was in command of the Little Rock, Ark., Arsenal when the war broke out, evacuating it before a superior rebel force, Feb. 9, 1861. On the 10th of May he captured Camp Jackson, Missouri, and was brevetted Major for gallant service at Booneville. As Chief of Artillery to Gen. LYONS, he took part in several engagements and was brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel for gallantry at Wilson's Creek. He continued as Chief of Artillery to Gen. FREMONT, who succeeded to the command after Gen. LYONS was killed, and likewise to Gen. HALLECK. He was promoted to Brigadier-General of Volunteers in 1862. He was in command of Missouri in 1862 and 1863, and fought several battles. His subsequent career embraced service as Inspector-General of the Department of the Missouri, May 29, 1863, to August 4, 1864; as Chief of Artillery of Military Division of West Mississippi, Aug. 30, 1864, to July 9, 1865; and as Chief of Ordnance of the same Department, Sept. 19, 1864, to July 9, 1865. In the latter capacity he was present at the attacks on the defenses of Mobile Bay, during March and April, 1865, receiving the brevet of Colonel in the regular army for the services on this occasion, and especially the fall of Fort Blakely. Brigadier-General. After the close of the war he was on duty as Inspector-General.

Diamond Setting.

This art, irrespective of ornamentation, has received important additions and modifications of late years. In the Indian method was to imbed the stones prejudicially like glaziers' diamonds. Medieval rings are of this character; but the brilliancy of the gem was lost. A collar of metal was raised around the stone and worked down to the gem. Rose diamonds being then much in vogue, this was not so objectionable. Considerable pressure having to be exerted, the edges of the stones were sometimes broken, and many heirlooms show these fractures. The fault in this method was that it gave opportunity for fraud. Bad color and flaws could be concealed by placing foil under the stones. The present plan of mounting the diamond with claws gives perfect security, at the same time preventing deception. There is, however, a duration to all things. Constant friction may in time damage the most careful setting. It is a wise precaution on the part of those wearing jewels to have them examined every two years. A moment's inspection by the expert determines whether a stone is safe or not; if it requires securing, the expense is trifling. It is exactly on questions of this nature that we refer with pleasure to Messrs. STARR & MARCUS, of No. 22 John-street, (upstairs,) whose knowledge of every detail of the jewelers' art, enables them at a glance to determine any fault. We believe that many of our fair readers, by consulting these gentlemen, can save themselves from annoyance and loss.—Harper's Weekly.

MUCH FOR LITTLE.—As a general thing, publishers do not give subscribers much more than their money's worth. The publishers of the Star Spangled Banner, however, seem to be "going one better," for they offer a superb "Prang" chrome, and their paper a whole year, for 75 cents, and the price of a similar chrome would be $1 50 anywhere. We have seen the chrome and can certify that it is a genuine "Prang."—American Newspaper Reporter.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

A Serious Outbreak—Elections or No Elections—Decline of National Institutions—The Struggle and its Incidents—Miscellaneous Gossip.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Sept. 23, 1871.

That grand bugbear of the ultra-Spanish Party continues to agitate the masses, and the most impracticable and wildest theories are daily discussed in relation to this all-important matter, which is of greater moment, and will exercise much more influence on the future political and social status of the Cuban and Spanish population, than the everlasting and apparently never-ending revolution. The people, that is to say the governing party, are opposed to the holding of any election, while the Home Government insists on the carrying out of the measure, in order to save its prestige and retain its majority in the Cortes. The Captain-General is placed in a very critical and unpleasant position. As an officer of the Crown, he is compelled to inaugurate the dreaded reform—which he is unable to enforce, because the people oppose it, and VALMASEDA is altogether powerless to do what the General Government asks of him. The main object of all parties, therefore, is to gain time. The Colonial Minister treats the question lengthily, writes a few high-sounding communications; the Captain-General takes his time to read them, and then makes some observations in return, which the Minister has to study over and digest at leisure. Between the issue of the order and its return, from two to three months are wasted, and this see-saw game has been carried on since the arrival of Gen. DULCE. The latest phase in the election problem, for such it must be called, is the appointment of Mr. SILVERIO GOMEZ DE LA TORRE as chief of the Election Department, but when the gentleman learned that he had been nominated to this important position he quietly conferred with the Captain-General, and then left on the first steamer for Cadiz, to talk the matter over with the Colonial Minister at Madrid. And so everything stands, and nothing will be done until the return of Mr. DE LA TORRE, who will require, at least six months to arrange preliminaries. It is positive that we need not look for an election for the next eighteen months. The result of the Porto Rico elections has frightened the Spaniards, and they are getting every day more suspicious of anything that sounds like reform. They don't believe in the article, and have much more faith in the arrival of reinforcements from Spain, and of modern arms, than in all the proclamations and laws which could be compounded by that erudite body known as the Cortes.

WARING NATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

The Cubans produce many facts to show that the supremacy and influence of Spain in the Antilles is on the wane; that Spanish customs are recreating slowly and surely before the customs of their Northern neighbor, and that American ideas are, imperceptibly at the moment, driving time-honored customs not only to the wall but out of the country. This is a truth, and no better proof can be furnished than the published advertisement that the national pride, the theme of every Spaniard's tongue, the world-renowned Plaza de Toros, can no longer sustain itself, but will be raffled off. What will sight-seeing foreigners do if the bull-ring should disappear, and perhaps make way for a livery-stable? What will become of the thousands who frequented the bull-fights on Sunday afternoons, enjoying the anger of the bull, the bravery of the espadaros and banderilleros, and the delicious pleasure of a horse galloping around the arena, utterly unconscious of the fact that the bull has gored him, and that his entrails are dragging on the ground! It is impossible to forecast the dire results of this catastrophe, and who knows but that the equally delicious pastime of a prize-fight may be substituted for the bull-fight! And so the glories of the ancien régime pass away, and PANCHO MARTI would never recognise his beloved Havana if he should return to earth and find that the city had no bull-ring, and was preparing to hold an election.

THE STRUGGLE.

The war continues, and no great change can be expected to occur until reinforcements have arrived to enable VALMASEDA to carry out his plans. In the meantime he is maturing his grand scheme to finish the revolution this Winter, and is moving from place to place to inspect all things in person. This tour of inspection makes the troops act with rapidity, compels skulking officers to go to the front, and forces the Quartermaster to furnish the allotted rations to the soldiers instead of selling them to the merchants in the smaller towns of the coast. The Cinco Villas are pacified; of course, they are, because it has been announced so often, but whenever it rains hard in that section of the country the insurgents grow like mushrooms, and come up in a single night. The insurgent Captain, SILLERO, surrounded some houses at the Reidos settlement, near Villa Clara, and carried off all the clothing and provisions on hand, and, according to the Spanish version forced some young men to join his ranks. The Cuban version is that the young men joined voluntarily, and by previous arrangement. Near Remedios, the Spaniards captured a small cannon which the insurgents had buried near the Abren plantation. The Spanish journals reported, some time ago, that RULOFF, the Pole, was wandering about the Central Department in a very sad plight, without men, and discredited by the Cubans; and now we learn from the same source that the man is commanding a considerable party in the Margarita Mountains near Villa Clara, and that PORTILLA has his hands full preventing him from overrunning the plains. The insurgent Captain, GUILLERMO FERNANDEZ, was captured and executed with several others. In the Central Department the Spanish troops not only continue to hold their own, but also to make some headway. The counter guerrillas are always on the move, and not a day passes without a few insurgents being killed. Gen. VELASCO has been successful in several encounters, and has captured a number of women and children when the Cubans abandoned the field. Gen. VALMASEDA pardoned over a hundred men sentenced for robbery of cattle and horses, on the ground that necessity and hunger compelled these men to steal. The Eastern Department is the scene of much hard work and painful marches for the Spanish soldiers. Brigadier CAMPOS is still operating near Guantanamo with varying success. The Cuban General, LUIS FIGUERREDO, strongly reinforced, crossed the Spanish lines, and is now in the jurisdiction of Bayamo, having left several detachments on his old camping-ground in the jurisdiction of Las Tunas. Several prominent insurgents surrendered themselves at Manzanillo.

MISCELLANEOUS NEWS.

The insurgent General, FERNANDO CALLEJAS, executed last month at Sancti Spiritus, was a native of Old Spain; his father is an officer in the army.... Two very celebrated personages, Col. GONZALEZ BORJA of Santiago de Cuba and Court-martial notoriety, is intensely disliked by the officers of the battalion to which he has been assigned by VALMASEDA.... It is stated that several Spanish men-of-war will go to Venezuela and bring all Spaniards away from there who may wish to settle in Cuba. About five hundred have already arrived at Havana.... All persons suspected of vagabondage in Cdlon must appear once a week before the Commissary, with a certificate proving that they are at work somewhere.... The next sugar crop promises to be unusually large. QUASIMODO.

Burglars at Work.

At an early hour yesterday morning Patrolman PITCAIRN, of the Fifteenth Precinct, discovered the door of the shop of A. MERKENT, shoe-maker, in the basement of No. 720 Broadway, to be unfastened. Upon investigating the matter it was found that burglars, having opened the street door with false keys, had cut through the partition at the back of the shop, and thus gained access to the workshop of WM. JACKSON, dealer in mourning goods, whose store occupies the street floor of the building. From the shop in the basement, the burglars ascended to the store above by a stairway, and having thoroughly ransacked the place, made their exit by the same way they had entered, taking with them seventy-five pieces of silk, valued at $2,000. The other goods in the store, in the usual way, so as to give no clue to the thieves or the property can be obtained.

Sunday night last the store of LOUIS MAYER, No. 38 Oliver-street, was entered by burglars who carried away clothing valued at $300. Two boys were found who had seen THOS. HUNT, FRANK DRISCOLL and FRANK LAWDON, colored, leaving the premises, carrying bundles. They were arrested by Detective FINN, of the Fourth Precinct, and were yesterday committed by Justice DOWLING.

The sales of Gold fell off from 114⅞ to 114⅝ ₱ cent. in the forenoon, and about 3 o'clock there was additional weakness, 114⅛ @ 114⅜. The Exchange market improved on this turn in Gold, and the leading drawers, who accepted 108 ₱ cent. less a brokerage yesterday, put up their rate to 108¼ ₱ cent. We find there was a large business done late on Monday at 107¾ @ 108 ₱ cent.

Money was in good demand to-day at 7 ₱ cent. On the Stock Exchange the Public Funds were a fraction less firm than on Monday, in sympathy with Gold. The Southern State Bonds were weaker on South Carolinas, with some pressure to sell. Tennessees were also weak. The Railway Mortgages were fairly supported. The Railroad Stocks were, with few exceptions, inactive, and the inclination of prices was lower than at the close on Monday. The heaviest business was done in Erie at 20¼ @ 20⅜ ₱ cent. Pacific Mail and Western Telegraph were steady.

After the late Boards the following quotations were made, as compared with Monday night, the market closing strong:

THE BAPTIST CONVENTION.

Anniversary of the Southern New-York Baptist Association—Election of Officers and Committees.

The Southern New-York Baptist Association held its first anniversary meeting at 10 A. M. yesterday, in the West Fifty-third-street Baptist Church. The Moderator, Rev. Tuostan D. Hudson, D.D., called the Association to order. The annual sermon was preached by Rev. J. S. Holme, D. D. He spoke eloquently of the profitable results which the Church in the future would derive from the present united body.

The Association then proceeded to organize, and the following officers were appointed: Rev. Thomas Armitage, D. D., President; Rev. C. C. Norton and James L. Hastie, Clerks; Rev. J. W. Brace, Jr., Treasurer; Rev. W. S. Mitchell, D. D., Corresponding Secretary.

The Aborigines and Aboriginal Remains of America.

Last evening, before the Historical Society, Rev. Edward Fontaine, of Louisiana, read an interesting paper on "The Aborigines and Aboriginal Remains of America." Mr. Fontaine commenced by speaking of the geological formation of this continent, which, he said, showed that it was older than the Continent of Europe. Before Columbus made his famous voyage hither, it was peopled by an ancient race who pointed to the remains of a still more ancient people, of whom they knew nothing. Before its so-called discovery, this continent was, he believed, inhabited by people of the European, Asiatic and negro races. The Asiatics were of the tribes of Scythia, and probably formed part of the vast migration westward by Gheengis Khan. The negroes came either from Asia or Africa, it was impossible to say which. The Europeans settled in Mexico, according to the traditions of Montezuma and his people. That the aboriginal inhabitants of this country were of the Mongolian race, was evidenced by their anatomical formation, complexions, habits, manners, customs, traditions, love of narcotics, use of the bow, wearing of the scalp-lock and the style of architecture adopted by them. The immense structures in Central America were evidently erected either by Phœnician builders, or by persons who had learned the art from them. The enormous buildings, and those who erected the same grandeur of Mexico, were of a somewhat different race, probably. Mr. Fontaine concluded his paper by some reflections on the rise and fall of empires. Those, he said, which had risen highest had fallen the lowest. They had forgotten the precept that "Righteousness exalteth a nation, while sin is a reproach to any people." In our own favored land corruption was already at work, and was spreading through every department of our Government. If we would avoid the impending doom, we must cast out the evil thing, remembering that by righteousness alone could the nation be saved.

Important Welsh Church Meeting.

The General Assembly of the Welsh Presbyterian Church met on Wednesday last in the Thirteenth-street Church, in this City, and concluded its session on Sunday. It was a very important meeting. Delegates were present from several of the States, and a large amount of business was transacted, the Assembly sitting from as early to a late hour daily. On Thursday, Rev. Dr. Spear, of the Presbyterian Board of Publication, Philadelphia, addressed the meeting after receiving a hearty reception from the brethren. On Friday evening, Rev. Dr. John Mark and Dr. McCosh, of Princeton College, delivered interesting addresses to a large audience. The preaching services were numerously attended, and were led as follows: Wednesday evening—by Rev. Wm. Hughes, of Racine, Wis., and Rev. M. A. Ellis, of Hyde Park, Penn.; Saturday evening—Rev. J. R. Isaac, of Collinsville, N. Y., and Rev. R. T. Evans, of Newark, Ohio; Sunday morning—Rev. E. J. Hughes, and Wednesday, Rev. Penry and Rev. Lemmi Jaffarse, of Utica, N. Y.; Sunday afternoon—Rev. R. E. Jones, of Bangor, Penn., and Rev. W. Roberts, D. D., of Bellevue, Penn.; Sunday evening—Rev. R. H. Evan, of Youngstown, Penn., and Rev. Thos. Foulkes, of Oshkosh, Wis. The parting address of the Moderator was very affecting, and altogether the meeting was one not soon to be forgotten by those who attended it. Rev. Howell Powell, popular pastor of the Church in which the Assembly met, did all that he could, together with his congregation, to make the delegates feel at home, and most successfully, too.

Arrival of Hon. Wm. H. Seward.

Hon. Wm. H. Seward arrived yesterday in the Java, and so unexpectedly that his numerous friends in the City had no opportunity to give him a proper reception. Hon. James Tallmadge, Deputy Collector of Customs, was notified by telegraph at an early hour in the morning of the arrival of the Java, and at once proceeded with the revenue cutter Northerner, to bring Mr. Seward to the City. But before he reached the steam-ship the party had been transferred by the courtesy of Dr. Cammochan, to the steam-boat Fletcher, and as the Northerner came down she ran alongside, and the gentlemen on board greeted Mr. Seward, and extended him a hearty welcome home. Mr. Clarence A. Seward escorted the party on board the Fletcher to Montrose, the residence of Mr. F. A. Seward, by the way from the foot of Twenty-third-street. Mr. Seward is in excellent health, and has sustained the fatigue of a voyage around the world at his time of life exceedingly well.

Arrival of Mr. Astbury.

Among the passengers on the Cunard steamer Java yesterday was Mr. James Astbury, of the yacht Livonia, which arrived on Sunday, and is lying off Clifton, Staten Island.

The final races of the New-York Yacht Club for 1871 will begin Oct. 16 with the race to Newport and return, for the Bennett Challenge Cup. Mr. Astbury will be asked to join in this contest, which will give him an opportunity of testing the speed of the Livonia with the Columbia, Sappho, Dreadnought, Enchantress and Wanderer. The arrangements for the Queen's Cup races are yet to be made.

Fire Marshal's Report.

The Fire Marshal's report for the last month shows that there were 40 fires during that period, 20 of which were caused by carelessness, 7 by explosion of kerosene lamps, 3 from liquid gas lamps, 2 from spontaneous combustion, and 6 from overheated stove-pipes. The loss on buildings was $27,000, on stock $64,230, of which $14,030 was uninsured. The average loss per fire in September, 1870, was $1,567, and in last month $1,350.

A New-Hampshire Man Convicted of Causing Abortion.

Dr. Chas. P. Wood, of Manchester, N. H. was tried in that city last week on the charge of causing the death of Elvira Woodward, of Troy, Vt., by the procuration of abortion. The case went to the jury on Saturday, and at about 9 o'clock Saturday evening they returned a verdict of guilty. The Mirror of Manchester, says:

"Dr. Wood has resided in this city for several years, and, until recently, has been regarded as a good citizen and a respectable man. Some years ago, desiring to make a living more easily, he left a mechanical pursuit, studied dentistry a few months, and opened an office. Meeting with no serious success in this branch of business, he enlarged his sphere of operations, and in a little time became a homœopathic physician and, subsequently undertook the allopathic system, and was announced as Doctor. He opened a hospital in Masonic Building and took patients home for treatment, and as first was not suspected of violating the laws of the State. At length it came to be understand that his place was mainly appropriated to the treatment of those unfortunate women who have sought to cover one crime by the commission of another. The case which brought Mr. Wood—there is no doctor about him—before the public is that already named, in which Miss Woodward was the victim. The theory of the case is that Miss Woodward, finding herself in a condition which would result in her disgrace, went to Wood's house and was operated upon by Wood, and that in consequence thereof she died. Wood induced her sister and friends to record her death from fever under a fictitious name. This led to a suspicion of foul play, to an investigation, an indictment, and finally a conviction. During the trial the respondent endeavored to show that the crime was committed by another party, and that he took the woman to his house as an act of mercy. But this very scheme defeated itself in the minds of the jury, who believed Wood to have laid his plans in such a way as to escape, though he was verily guilty. It is probable exceptions will be taken, and a new trial sought, but there is little prospect of an escape from the sentence, which cannot be less than ten years in the State Prison. Dr. Wood is not a bad man. Indeed, he is agreeable and social, and but for the love of gain would not have engaged in a violation of the law, and been placed in such a disgraceful position. He has two sons, young men, of good character, who are much respected."

WORDS FROM THE PEOPLE.

An Appeal to the Governor.

SIR: I always defended you, voted for you, and contributed my substance to aid elevating you to the Chief Magistracy of this State, who, knowing you as I do, possessed of great and good qualities, that your enemies were lost in a quagmire of doubts. But did I ever say my resentment until MALLOCH CAMPAIGN, exasperated the latter, and aroused me all HAVANA meant was when TWEED and HOSMER were too much for any man. Undoubtedly this formula will prove true in regard to HALL, TWEED and SWEENY. You if would sooner see you acting alone in the matter.

I have heard your eloquent denunciations of the corrupt expenditures of the General Government after the war. Please now look at home. An unscrupulous war had been carried on; all the restraints of business was broken up; extinction of life and treasure were sacrificed for to preserve our National existence, and a noble spirit of economy in regard to either would have been a crime against mankind. But now, in the midst of profound peace, under a charter guaranteed by yourself, corruption and official theft run riot among your political friends in New-York, and you do nothing! It cannot be to be expected with military lines half way across this continent, with arming and feeding to be improvised, and initial errors of mismanagement and bloodshed, that official thrift would be developed. But it was expected, when the Democratic Party succeeded to power in this State, that they would not permit the City of New-York to be plundered, and your speeches on economical reform disregarded, by a set of thieves who have well-nigh involved in ruin the party that made you its figure-head. In the storm a man is justified in throwing overboard valuables to save the ship; to do so at any other time would be hereasy, punishable with death. You cried Economy in the tempest, but are silent while the ship is being pillaged in a calm. I confess I can see no consistency in this.

You have now a greater occasion for denunciation than you had then. As Chief Executive it is your duty to see the law enforced. Without that power your office would be a sinecure. The devised. Statutes permit you to call extraordinary terms of the Court of Oyer and Terminer, and leave a fund at your disposal for the apprehension of criminals. You can remove the District-Attorney, if he neglects his duty, or direct the Attorney-General to assist him. If you, as the Governor, would repudiate the Ring for five minutes, it would consign its leaders to political perdition and place yourself pre-eminent among politicians. To them it would be the dawn of Fame, to you political immortality. Why, then, are you silent? Do you fear you might get ill unit on the fumes of popular applause that would follow such an act, and thereby incur the malignity of PETER B. SWEENY for your inquisitions? Do you doubt the City has been defrauded of millions? The action of the Supreme Court in exercising its equitable powers by injunction must remove all skepticism. There is no use to quote figures to prove facts universally conceded.

Injunctions, as you know, are very sparingly used. Indeed, they are never issued if another mode exists by which an adequate legal remedy can be obtained. Take the case of a partnership as an illustration. Unless a partner is guilty of fraud great fraud that it becomes necessary to dissolve the firm, a Court will refuse to grant one. What then must be the danger to a whole community, when equity is compelled to step in and restrain the highest officials of the Metropolis in exercising functions where the law gives them discretionary power? Nothing, my dear Sir, but the fact that their conduct has been so fraudulent, their rapacity so extravagant, that equity, as a last resort, is driven to a remedy which it never uses, unless irreparable injury is threatened. I am still more astonished at the presumption of these men, who, knowing they are in the power of the law, are still procuring for another canvass. Would they dare do this unless they calculated on your mercy? When the law slumbers we may expect repeaters at the polls, false election returns, and every species of fraud known to the Ring. When these things can exist, we may bid adieu to democratic institutions, unless we seek to protect ourselves by revolution. I would sooner be in the power of a King than at boneless ruffians at the Five Points. To me the worst specimen of a human being is the demagogue, who, under the cloak of principle, is betraying liberty for private gain; and when to that you add ignorance and effrontery, treachery and cordiality, we have the elements of a New-York Ring politician, fit to ripen under the influence of Tammany into a disciple of TWEED and SWEENY.

The Ring never supported you from choice. It was necessary to oppose you as a candidate for Governor, because you were known to have talent, and believed to have integrity. If you were deceived into signing the bill which the Erie Railroad directors got up to perpetuate their power, you did so through influence. Firm men could resist, and you did not contemplate the consequence. Your character and antecedents are in opposition to the character and antecedents of [illegible]

[illegible] Democratic confidence that these fines are usually imposed and purchased by an [illegible] and it is the public [illegible] collected over good into the public treasury, and [illegible] as an extra fund for the support of [illegible] Many candidates [illegible] of the fines is usually placed at [illegible] some avoid annoyance by going to the Mayor's office and taking out a permit, for which they pay six. This exempts them for a year. Those who neglect this precaution, on being served with a notice that they are fined, are advised that they can get a clearance by going to the Corporation Attorney's office and paying [illegible] cent fine. Now, under the common construction of his innocence and relying on his ability to prove it, rashly undertakes to contest [illegible] suit, but the Tammany complainant and the Tammany Magistrate are too many for him. He has to pay not only the full amount of the fine, but many additional costs as a penalty for his unsuccessful contest.

Probably there is no kind of extortion practiced by the "Ring" more directly annoying to business men than this, and, as a class, they would be glad to have it ventilated. They are all very curious to know how much is collected in this way, and still more curious to know where it goes to.

New-York, Saturday, Sept. 30, 1871.

A "Democrat" Interviews Beauregard.

A Democratic paper published in Kansas City, Mo., sent a reporter to interview Gen. BEAUREGARD, while he was visiting that city, last week. The results are given in a long article, and the Democrats of Kansas City must be very bitterly partisan if they can read with pleasure such stuff as it contains. "The presence of Gen. P. G. T. BEAUREGARD in Kansas City, yesterday," the interviewer says, "was the event of the day, and sent a thrill of pleasure and surprise into the hearts of all who remembered this noted soldier's services during the late war between the States." Our reporter found Gen. BEAUREGARD at the residence of Mr. JOHN M. AVERY, on Sixth-street, where, surrounded by a few of his personal friends, he was chatting pleasantly upon general topics, Kansas City in particular. For a moment our reporter could not help contrasting the unpretentious appearance of this, the hero of Manassas, Shiloh and Sumter, with the showy political parcaut then in progress not thirty miles away, where the "Great Sun, U. S. GRANT, was receiving a sickening deluge of municipal flattery, cheap buncombe, and shoddy." Of course to a "Democrat" approaching him in such a frame of mind as this extract indicates, BEAUREGARD could talk unreservedly, and it is not surprising, therefore, to find him bitterly denouncing WARMOTH, DUNN and "his colored cohorts," the carpet-baggers and the Radicals; and winding up by asking what "the Southern people" can do, disfranchised, outlawed, suppressed and governed by their former servants and a gang of political adventurers backed by the army and navy? All they can do, he said, is to be patient and wait for a change and deliverance. And then, speaking of the Democratic nomination, this Democratic hero "condescended to say: "For my own part I prefer Gen. HANCOCK, as being a patriot, a scholar and a statesman, while the name of GRATZ BROWN is hailed by the people of the South as the most available. I think GRATZ BROWN, of Missouri, upon the new departure platform, would sweep the South in '72. We are prepared to support heartily and unitedly whoever the Northern Democracy may nominate. We care not who it may be, we shall work for the election of the ticket. Let us once effect a change—anything is better than the present unhappy condition of the South. The Southern people know the battle will be won in '72. We fought and won by the Northern Democracy, if won at all. They, therefore, will give every aid and acquiesce in whatever may be deemed the best to insure a Democratic victory in 1872."

We make one other extract from this important interview. BEAUREGARD, as we are told, [illegible] saying "with a smile," "Gen. LONGSTREET is [illegible] Democratic candidate for Governor in [illegible] Gen. GRANT gave him the Collectorship of New-Orleans, as is seldom seen. He seems to have passed almost entirely from the minds of his former friends. We know little or nothing about him now in the South. The other Southern Generals most frequently in Gen. BEAUREGARD's mouth, whether in private or public, were PEMBERTON, BRAGG and JOHNSTON. "Gen. BEAUREGARD is engaged in the insurance business in New-Orleans. Other prominent Southern leaders are engaged in various pursuits in New-Orleans."

THE STATE CONVENTION.

Its Action and Nominations—Comments of the Republican Press of the State.

There were published in Saturday's TIMES liberal and impartial quotations from editorials relating to the results of the Republican State Convention, from all the Republican papers of New-York State, outside of this City and Brooklyn, which had been received up to the hour of going to press. No distinction was made between what are called Conkling papers and Fenton papers. The same course has been pursued in the further extracts, from other papers, presented below; and they show, as will be seen, that whatever is thought of the action of the Convention on the question of our City affairs, there is but one opinion as to the duty of all the members of the party as relates to the ticket nominated, and that is that it should be heartily and unitedly supported and triumphantly elected:

Ogdensburg Journal.

It is proper for us to say that all the delegates from the Seventeenth Congressional District upon comparing notes previous to the meeting of the Convention, found they were at Syracuse for the sake of harmony, and not as the friends of FENTON or CONKLING, and by a unanimous vote of the delegation determined should the contingency arise to vote for the personal preference of neither. The contingency partly arose in the presentation of the name of G. HILTON SCRIBNER for temporary Chairman, and the offering of the resolution to declare the Murphy delegation regular, and thirteen of our delegates voted steadily together on all subjects. In withdrawing from the Convention they desired thereby to express the most emphatic dissent to the claim that the State Committee may go unbidden to interfere with an organization of the party in any county, and they will adhere to that position though the party State Conventions should assert the opposite as emphatically. They make no objection to the ticket nominated, because they go for principles, not men, and oppose men only when they become obnoxious to principle. The candidates put in nomination are all good men. G. HILTON SCRIBNER, of Westchester, is not identified with any faction. He is tried, faithful, and competent, as are his associates on the ticket. They will all receive the earnest support of the Republicans of St. Lawrence, who will now, as ever, lead the column in giving the highest majority for the State ticket.

Troy Times.

The State Convention decided, by an emphatic majority, that the reorganization in New-York is an act that ought to have been done; and that it is well done and shall stand. Is that sufficient reason for quarreling and disruption? Is there a Republican paper in the City which has not repeatedly declared that reorganization should be made? Is it not demonstrated that the imperfect of the organization in the Metropolis required such a course? Have not all the steps which have been taken open, fair to all, and in the interests of honesty, efficiency in work and independence? It was open in the outset to any who chose to come in. It is open now to all who feel the inclination to join it. If it does not succeed in keeping the Two, which is to be preferred, the old Committee or the new? The question of authority is deemed to the Convention by the old Committee. Yet they were willing to accept the proposal to refer the matter to the next one for decision. In this they admitted the power. Then why not exercise it at once and not wait till next year? The Convention resolved to go on and voted to settle that disturbing question now. And that is all it did vote to do; that is all the cause which exists for ill-feeling; that is the whole source of the disorder and the rupture. To the sober sense of every Republican this question now is submitted. Is this adequate reason for serious and perhaps fatal dissensions in our party at the juncture? Is not the tickets of good men? Is not the platform a sound one? Is not the crisis, one which demands unity and peace? It is not an ordinary occasion in our political affairs. The duty is one of extraordinary character. The opportunity is one of rare excellence. Shall it be said that our party, which has met so nobly and so effectively other great crises, fail because a new committee takes the place of a condemned one in the City? We refuse now to take cognizance of other controversies, which have not been passed upon in the Convention. We know they are in the party, and are to be deprecated. But they are not directly in issue at present. Let us all stick to the issue that is decided, and forestall no future contests.

Buffalo Express.

If a proper spirit of peace-making had actuated the leaders who commanded a small majority in the Convention, they would have admitted both these contesting delegations, upon equal terms, without deciding the question of regularity between them, and then adopted measures to effect a reorganization in the City under competent and recognized authority. By insisting upon the recognition of the regularity of [illegible] they have [illegible] [illegible] which was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Davenport, on the opposite bank of the river, is connected by a railroad bridge. The last rail of this road was laid July 7, 1871, and the line is now open and doing business with a success exceeding all anticipations. Its location is such as to place upon the road the large equipment necessary for the business offered, and to command, during the next and coming years, constant increase, to that equal to any of the best old roads in the country, as is now required of this, the Company's offer, through the undersigned, $1,500,000 convertible first mortgage gold bonds, which cover the entire property of the Company, and is less than $7,500 per mile. PRESENT PRICE, 90, AND ACCRUED INTEREST IN CURRENCY. Principal and interest payable in gold in New-York or London, free of tax. Coupons payable February and Aug. 1.

The road, opened for the immediate local as well as through traffic, now offered, will prove one of the most profitable in the West traversing as it does a district of country unsurpassed in fertility of soil and development, recovered already thirty years old and on a high state of cultivation. This is self-evident from the fact that every section of the road passes through cultivated fields and many flourishing towns and villages, with a large city and navigable river at each end. Railroads in the West have been heretofore constructed through unsettled and unsolicited regions of the country, consequently have had but little local traffic to depend upon for several years after construction. But the Peoria and Rock Island Railway is a first class COMPLETED road, with NO PARALLEL or COMPETING LINE, and RUNS THROUGH ONE OF THE RICHEST AGRICULTURAL, MANUFACTURING AND MOST POPULOUS DISTRICTS IN THE WEST. That it is certain that the local business is already more than enough to sustain the road, while the through traffic is unlimited, as the connections are numerous, which can be seen by a glance at the map.

This road is a grand central link, to which many of the principal lines centralize and diverge to all parts of the continent.

We invite the attention of investors to this loan. Being familiar with the wealth and resources of the country along the line of this railway and A MEMBER OF OUR FIRM HAVING MADE A CAREFUL EXAMINATION OF THE ROAD AND ITS PROPERTY, WE CAN WITH THE UTMOST CONFIDENCE RECOMMEND THE BONDS AS A PRIME SECURITY, reliable and safe in every particular.

All marketable securities received in exchange at full rates, and bonds delivered to all parts of the country, free of express charges.

Maps, circulars, &c., with full particulars relative to the road, furnished on application by the undersigned, Financial Agents of the Company.
